Dewey Expected to Be Nominated on First Ballot Today

Convention Expected to Wind Up 24 Hours Early

Warren Tells His Delegation He Will Not Accept Second Place

BULLETIN

Convention Headquarters, Chicago, June 27 (U.P.).—Gov. Earl Warren of California told his delegation tonight he would not accept the nomination for Vice President if it were offered to him.

By Edward T. Folliard

Chicago, June 27.—A limp and word-weary Republican National convention assembled to hear former President Herbert Hoover and Congresswoman Clara Boothe Luce of Connecticut tonight, amid indications that the grand finale would come tomorrow, 24 hours ahead of schedule.

If everything goes right, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey will stride onto the E-shaped platform tomorrow night and formally accept the Republican nomination for President.

Beside him will be his running mate, Gov. Earl Warren of California, who sincerely does not want the vice presidential nomination but will bow to his party's wishes.

The GOP leaders running this convention hope to have the nominating speeches for Dewey, Gov. John Bricker of Ohio and Lieut. Comdr. (former Gov.) Harold Stassen of Minnesota out of the way by noon tomorrow.

Roosevelt Parallel Voted

Balloting would start shortly thereafter, with Gov. Dewey going over before the first roll call is finished.

The convention would then turn to the nomination of a candidate for Vice President, which originally was scheduled to come off Thursday. So far as is known, only one name will be presented—that of Governor Warren.

By that time, Governor Dewey probably will be on his way to the Albany Airport to emulate Franklin D. Roosevelt's dramatic Albany-to-Chicago flight of 1932.

This carbon-copy program was the cause for some needling of the Dewey managers today, but they took it in stride. They said they would be well satisfied if the parallel continued and ended at the polls, in victory, as Mr. Roosevelt's campaign did 12 years ago.

Many Plan to Leave Early

The Dewey strategists, without necessarily using steamroller tactics, moved to wind the convention up a day early because they wanted their man to be able to speak before the full convention at a night session. Many of the delegates, and especially those from the Far West, plan to leave Chicago Thursday afternoon, thereby saving money and escaping from the frightful heat.

Gov. Dwight Griswold of Nebraska will make the speech placing Dewey in nomination. Then will come the seconding speeches. There won't be many of these, and those that are delivered will be relatively short. The convention managers are hoping to get away from the tantalizing "man who" oratory of other years.

Governor Bricker will be placed in nomination by James Garfield Stewart, mayor of Cincinnati, and will be seconded by Senator E. H. Moore of Oklahoma.

Commander Stassen will be formally offered to the delegates by

Dirksen to Get 1st D. C. Vote for Vice President

By a Post Staff Writer

Chicago, June 27.—Although Gov. Earl Warren of California is expected to be "drafted" for the GOP vice presidential nomination, the District delegation decided today not to climb on the band wagon immediately. The delegation will cast its three votes on the first ballot for Representative Everett McKinley Dirksen of Illinoise as a "compliment," and token of appreciation for his long services to the District as the ranking minority member of the House District Committee.

Dirksen is a candidate for the GOP presidential nomination, but New York's Governor Thomas Edmund Dewey has virtually pushed him out of the race.

The Illinois Congressman has been a member of the District Committee for 12 years and has always taken an active part in shaping District legislation.

Challenge to Party Youth

Roosevelt Endangers Freedom, Hoover Says

Chicago, June 27 (AP).—Herbert Hoover, asserting the New Deal in milder form has followed tactics of European revolutions, told the Republican convention tonight that "only by a change in administration will our returning soldiers find freedom preserved at home."

He also declared that President Roosevelt apparently was engaging in "power politics" and "personal power diplomacy" in foreign affairs. This, he asserted, is "not the diplomacy of freedom."

"This convention is handing the leadership of the Republican Party to a new generation," the former president and party elder statesman said, and addressed these words particularly to the "younger men":

"You in your own manner can lead our people away from the jungle of disorderly, cynical and bitter ideas, the topsy-turvy confusions, the hopelessness and lack of faith and defeatism that have haunted this Nation over these dozen years.

"You can lead our Nation back to unity of purpose again."

In general, Hoover's theme was that this war is being fought for freedom and it will not be attained at home or in the world if there is a continuation of the Roosevelt Administration's domestic and foreign policies.

He made these principal points:

1. "Any compromise with Hitler or Tojo will destroy all hope of either freedom or a lasting peace."

2. The young people in the armed services want, most of all, freedom when they return from the war—"they want to be free to choose their own jobs and not be ordered to them by a bureaucrat."

3. Under the New Deal, there has been a progressive degeneration of freedom in America.

"Has not every distress, every sorrow, every fear of the people been used to further fasten some part of these totalitarian practices upon us?" he asked.

4. Freedom can be regenerated in this country but it means the "hard task" of actions to "build self-reliance, stimulate initiative, and thereby create men and wom-

Rep. Luce Says U. S. Becoming A 'Bumbledom'

Charges Administration Distorting Democracy Into Dictatorial State

By Christine Sadler

Chicago, June 27.—Clare Boothe Luce, the Congresswoman from Connecticut, stepped from her role as a sophisticated phrasemaker tonight to strike at the New Deal through G I Jim, the plain American soldier who is not coming home from the war.

In the first major speech ever delivered at a Republican national convention by a woman, the slender 41-year-old blonde used Jim—the "pal and buddy of G I Joe"—to show up the Democratic Party as one that promised peace but failed to deliver.

"For this terrible truth cannot be denied," she told the cheering Republicans, "these promises which were given by a Government that was elected again and again and again, because it made them lie quite as dead as young Jim lies now.

"Jim was the heroic heir of the unheroic Roosevelt decade: A decade of confusion and conflict that ended in war."

"Dictatorial Bumbledom"

It was in war itself, Mrs. Luce declared, that Jim had to learn "hard and challenging truths that his Government was too soft and cynical, in peace, to tell him."

Leaving behind the crisp language she used less than a decade ago when writing "The Women," often called the most bitter satire ever penned about her sex, the beautiful Republican frankly admitted her flowing language of tonight was addressed to the vast audience of American women who never see plays on Broadway—but who will be voting in November.

Declaring her party had selected her to voice its praise for the war work of women, Congresswoman Luce said women do not like to have political pleas made to them as women. "And," she said, "they feel no differently from the men about the inefficiency, abusiveness,

U. S. Envoy To Argentina Ordered Home

Course of Relations Under Discussion With Other Americans

By the Associated Press

Ambassador Norman Armour has been ordered home from Argentina "for consultation," the State Department announced yesterday.

A department official said it should be considered only logical that Armour would be recalled at this time when the whole course of Argentine relations is under discussion with other American governments.

Nonetheless, Armour's recall was regarded here as marking a deterioration of U. S.-Argentine diplomacy.

Hull Sees Ambassador

A series of unusual conferences between Secretary of State Hull and Latin American ambassadors yesterday prompted speculation in diplomatic circles that the American nations are considering further moves to express their disapproval of the militarist regime in Argentina.

Recognition of Bolivia last week cleared Pan American dockets for taking up the Argentine problem, viewed here as especially grave.

During the past week Hull has seen most of the Latin American ambassadors. Monday he met with six Central American diplomats at once. Yesterday he saw representatives from Haiti, Cuba and the Dominican Republic, as well as the ambassador from Mexico.

No Relations Since Feb. 25

Officials here have been particularly disturbed by a recent speech by Col. Juan Peron, Argentine minister of war, who called for an expansionist policy for Argentina and told his country that it should be prepared to fight.

The United States has had no diplomatic relations with Argentina since February 25, when Gen. Edelmiro Farrell took over the gov-

Dewey Starts Longhand Draft Of Chicago Acceptance Speech

Albany, June 27 (U.P.).—Governor Thomas E. Dewey, apparently certain of his nomination as the Republican presidential candidate for 1944, abandoned his formal executive routine today to work on drafts of his acceptance speech to be delivered at the party's national convention in Chicago, possibly tomorrow night.

The Governor started working on the address in longhand about 2:15 this afternoon. Paul Lockwood, his executive secretary; Elliott V. Bell, State banking superintendent; James C. Hagerty, his executive assistant; Hickman Powell, a close adviser, and Lillian Rosse, his secretary, will be called in later to assist him.

The revelation that Dewey was working on the speech was made despite the fact he never has said he would accept the nomination. There was still no indication as to whether the governor planned to go to Chicago by train or airplane.

Mother Leaves for Chicago

Owosso, Mich., June 27 (AP).—With her son, Gov. Thomas E. Dewey of New York, set to fly to Chicago to accept the Republican nomination for the Presidency, Mrs. George M. Dewey of this city left this morning for Chicago to join him when he arrives.

Mrs. Dewey, who said she talked with Governor Dewey by phone Sunday night, left by automobile with friends, including Mrs. Herman H. Dignan, wife of the Michigan secretary of state.

GOP Adopts Platform Unchanged

Threatened Fight On Foreign Policy Fails to Materialize; Vote Is Unanimous

By Robert C. Albright

Chicago, Stadium, June 27—The Republican National Convention today approved a 14-page campaign platform substantially reiterating every Mackinac Island foreign and domestic policy pledge without an echo of the "Governors' Rebellion" that last night shook the Resolutions Committee.

The Committee's 4600-word declaration of GOP principles was read to the Convention by Resolutions Chairman Robert A. Taft of Ohio.

The platform was adopted at 5:35 p. m., without a dissent. Only a scattering of delegates attending the interim session heard Taft read the controversial foreign policy declaration. It received only mild applause.

They cheered wildly at only one point in the domestic platform, when the Ohio Senator read the GOP call for a flat constitutional ban on more than two terms for any President.

2-Term Limit Cheered

There was a tense moment when convention Chairman Joseph W. Martin, jr., moved adoption of the platform. But if any Governor had planned a floor fight he did not speak up. Martin's gavel fell. The platform, on which Thomas E. Dewey must stand after his nomination, probably tomorrow, was GOP campaign law.

Approved unanimously by the committee, without a single concession to the Governors' demands for "plain talk" on foreign policy, the proposed platform again espoused use of "peace force" to repel aggression and laft undisturbed the earlier declaration against a "world state."

Win Domestic Demands

On domestic planks alone, strongly emphasizing the States' Rights theme of Mackinac Island conference, were the Governors granted nearly everything they asked, but on these there was no real controversy.

Gov. Sumner Sewall of Maine made one last stand before the resolutions committee for a foreign policy declaration "that says what it means and means what it says," but his "suggestions" were sidetracked and, on motion, roundly defeated, viva voce.

Sewall moved specifically to strike from the plank a ban on America "joining a world state," which had roused Wendell Willkie to press broadside and helped prod the governors into action. Sewall was licked and apparently ready to drop the fight.

Shortly afterward the completed platform was unanimously ap-

Reds Seize Orsha; Fight In Mogilev

Enter Bobruisk Environs; Trap 5 More Divisions; Take 1500 Places

London, (Wednesday), June 28 (AP).—The mighty Soviet offensive swept forward through the German Fatherland Line in White Russia yesterday, capturing the railway junction of Orsha, entering the streets of Mogilev and the outskirts of Bobruisk, and liquidating five divisions of Nazis in a pocket southwest of Vitebsk, Moscow announced.

Twenty thousand German officers and men were killed in the Vitebsk area, the broadcast Russian communique asserted.

Already battered far below their normal strength of 12,000 each, the German divisions fought desperately in a futile battle, Moscow said, and finally accepted an ultimatum of surrender. Preliminary reports showed 10,000 Germans had been taken prisoner in this action.

Five More Divisions Trapped

Even while announcing the liquidation of these units, identified by Moscow as the German 4th, 197th, 206th and 246th infantry divisions aid 6th airborne division, the communique said five other Nazi infantry divisions had been encircled by Russian drives east and south of Bobruisk.

Nearly 1500 places of varying size were recaptured during the day's advances, it was announced.

Fall of the key German defense points of Vitebsk and Zhlobin, 155 miles to the south, was announced by the Russians yesterday.

Premier Stalin said in an order of the day that Orsha fell to "a swift bypassing maneuver in conjunction with a frontal attack."

The implication was that few of its defenders escaped from that railway junction 50 miles south of Vitebsk on the main line to Minsk.

The German radio already had acknowledged that Nazi forces were retreating in the Mogilev sector, 45 miles south of Orsha, and said the Russians were striking in a new area south of Bobruisk, 70 miles southwest of Mogilev. Latest Russian dispatches showed Red army troops swinging a scythe around Bobruisk, with the tip only 13 miles away on the south.

Worst Yet to Come

The Germans admitted also that the battle had "spread north of Vitebsk, where the Russians have thrown in large forces east of Polotsk," and conceded that "the big Soviet offensive does not seem to have reached its full development."

Thus the Red army was in the process of rapidly caving in the whole German defensive system in White Russia, the so-called "father-

Nazis Parade In Helsinki; Off To Fight Reds

New Solidarity of Finland, Germany Marked First Time

Stockholm, June 27 (AP).—German troops marched through the streets of Helsinki tonight toward Finland's Eastern Front in the first token of solidarity and "perfect understanding" just announced as being achieved by Finland and Germany, a direct Associated Press dispatch from the Finnish capital said tonight.

Even before Helsinki's official communique had announced the new degree of Finnish collaboration with Germany, the troops had tramped through the capital, singing Nazi songs.

One German detachment marched past the Finnish Parliament while the deputies were in session.

Finland to Fight On

London, June 27 (U.P.).—The Finnish Government announced tonight that it had decided to stay in the war and had asked for German help, and that Germany announced the help—military as well as economic—would be forthcoming.

The German DNB Agency broadcast that German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop had visited Helsinki, that the Finns had asked him for military aid, and that Germany would give the assistance requested.

There were reports in Stockholm that Ribbentrop had gone to Helsinki after Field Marshal Baron Carl von Mannerheim and perhaps other Finnish leaders had refused to go to Germany to discuss the situation, and Ribbentrop had hinted that if Finland tried to get out of the war Germany would occupy the country.

2 Nazi Chiefs At Cherbourg Surrender

By Henry T. Gorrell

Cherbourg, June 26 (Delayed) (U.P.).—Hands in the air, Lieut. Gen. Karl Wilhelm von Schlieben, German army commander in Cherbourg, and Rear Admiral Walter Hennecke, naval commander, came up out of their 30-foot-deep tunnel shelter near the German E-boat base this afternoon and surrendered to the general commanding the assault division which was about to storm their position.

Straggling after the general and the admiral came 800 German troops.

A few minutes later, at the headquarters of Maj. Gen. Joseph Lawton Collins, commanding the Seventh Army Corps, attacking Cherbourg, Schlieben was asked if he was ready to surrender the rest of his troops, and I heard him say emphatically:

"Nein!"

He explained, at first, that he was not in position to surrender his men because he was out of contact with them as they were fighting in isolated groups. But a little later, when our general asked him how "from the purely moral standpoint" he could surrender and permit his men to fight on, Schlieben replied that from his experience in Russia, small groups of diehards could achieve great delay.

Schlieben, more than 6 feet tall and of considerable bulk, looked like a gorilla. He dwarfed everyone around him. Gray-haired, 49, he wore a greatcoat with silver-starred epaulette and kept it on even indoors. His face showed the strain of the last few days.

Sitting down in their great tunnel, their headquarters, Schlieben and Hennecke decided to surrender just after the assault troops had opened fire on it and were preparing to go in.

A German lieutenant, goose-stepping, came out with a white flag and marched unflinching into the American fire. The general gave the order to the troops to stop firing. The lieutenant announced to him that Schlieben was ready to give up. The lieutenant went back

Allies Flank Caen, Press To 3 Miles Of Bastion

32,000 Prisoners Surrender After Cherbourg's Fall; Repairs Rushed

Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Forces (Wednesday), June 28 (INS).—Five German generals have been killed and two others captured in the three-week campaign in Normandy, it was announced early today.

Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force (Wednesday), June 28 (AP).—British troops, quickly exploiting the American capture of Cherbourg, which hiked Axis losses to at least 70,000 men since D-Day, launched a major attack at the eastern end of the Normandy front yesterday, rolling to within 3 miles of Caen and outflanking that German bastion on the road to Paris.

An Allied communique at 11:30 p. m. said the Caen-Villers-Bocage Railway had been crossed near Mouen, 4 miles southwest of Caen, in an advance made despite determined enemy resistance in torrential rain.

Front dispatches indicated that the tank-supported British also had cut the Caen-Avranches trunk highway across the base of the Normandy Peninsula. It runs close by Mouen, and in two days the British have advanced 7 miles east and southeast of Tilly-sur-Seulles and captured nine villages.

Thousands of Prisoners

Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery's British units sprang into action even as thousands of German troops were filing into American prison cages at Cherbourg and Allied repair experts were hurrying to make the port a springboard for huge reinforcements and supplies.

Twenty thousand Germans have been captured in the cleanup of the Cherbourg Peninsula, the Allied communique said, "and more are being brought in."

The total Axis prisoner bag thus far is at least 32,000, and probably will exceed that figure when the final Cherbourg count is tallied. The 20,000 prisoners taken included those in Cherbourg and others captured in the advance on the port from the Barneville-Saint Sauveur-Montebourg sectors.

Double Track Paris Road

The fall of Cherbourg late Monday night gave the Allies the port and railhead for the double-track railway leading to Paris. A 75-mile section of the track now is in Allied hands, extending from Cherbourg through Caretan and Bayeux to only a few miles west of razed

General De Gaulle To Come Here Between July 5-9

President Roosevelt revealed yesterday that Gen. Charles de Gaulle, head of the French Committee of National Liberation, will visit Washington between July 5 and July 9.

De Gaulle suggested that period for his visit and the President stated that he had replied that the period between those dates would be perfectly satisfactory to him.

Mr. Roosevelt said jokingly that he might visit the Normandy beachhead in France. He had been asked at his news conference whether he would comment on the progress of the French underground in cooperating with Allied forces. He replied that he did not know much about it as he had not been to Normandy—yet.

"Does that imply you may be going there?" a newsman asked.

Mr. Roosevelt said he was not in the implying mood, but that those present well knew he was wholly unpredictable.

Fisher Tells of Strangling, Clubbing Librarian to Death

By Jean Reiff

Testifying in a low monotone, Julius Fisher yesterday told the Cathedral murder jury how he strangled and clubbed Catherine Reardon "to stop her squawking," dragged her body to the washroom, where he strangled her a second time after she regained consciousness and then stabbed her in the throat with a penknife "to finish the business."

"She called me a black nigger and I got angry and smacked her. It looked like I got angry inside and it welled up in my chest. She screamed and ran. The screams got on my nerves and I got scared and nervous—the screams were so loud. So I ran upstairs, grabbed a stick and ran back and hit her with it," Fisher told the jury.

"The stick broke, so I choked her and she seemed to become unconscious. Then I dragged her out. I wasn't trying to kill her but trying to stop her from making the noise. She squawked again while I was wiping up the blood. I choked her but there was still noise, so I stabbed her. She stopped then."

The Negro handyman, first defense witness, described how he carried her body in his arms to the subbasement, washed up the blood with her panties and threw them beside her in the tunnel, then left the library not knowing whether she was living or dead.

"What did you do then?" asked Defense Counsel Charles H. Houston.

"I went home, got undressed and got into bed," Fisher answered. "I fell asleep and woke up in the afternoon. I was nervous as if I had a bad dream. I first realized what I had done after I woke up. I couldn't think of anything to do, so I stayed in bed until the next morning."

He spent the next day wandering around town, he stated. "I decided to give myself up, but I didn't have enough courage. I didn't see any papers and I still didn't know whether she was dead or alive," he explained.

Fisher told the jury that he was taken to police headquarters after his arrest in a local restaurant. While he was being questioned he was struck in the mouth by one of the detectives and kicked in the side by another, he declared. He denied that it had been explained to him before he made a written confession that he had constitutional rights not to make such a statement.

The typewritten statement signed by Fisher and introduced as evidence yesterday, was taken

Yanks Battle Japs for Saipan As Foe's Resistance Stiffens

Pearl Harbor, June 27 (AP).—A bitter struggle raged today for Saipan, key to the Marianas Islands, and its capital of Garapan with heightened Japanese resistance indicating an all-out infantry battle may be at hand.

Front-line dispatches pictured desperate street fighting in Garapan. American Marines and soldiers held the southern outskirts of the town, which had a peacetime population of 10,000.

Patrols cautiously probing into the city met the fire of Nipponese snipers an machine-gunners. Every house and cellar was a hideout for enemy soldiers. Every street and alley was littered with the dead. The town was a pile of wreckage.

The island-wide battle lines hinged at the center on Mount Tapo chau, now in American hands. From that dominating height at the island's center the front reached westward to coastal Garapan and eastward to Donnay Village.

Japanese resistance had stiffened all along the front, said a dispatch from Howard Handleman, representing the combined American press. It appeared the American invaders had reached a sector where the enemy had selected to stage a last-ditch defense.

Terrain typical of the worst of the Pacific battlefields was slowing the American advance. The irregular front poked sharply ahead, where resistance was light and

British Smash Back Into Ruined Chiusi

War Sidelights

Yanks Find Real Savages On Biak Isle

Biak Island, Dutch New Guinea, June 26 (delayed) (AP).—Yank soldiers invading remote Biak Island have for the first time encountered natives whom they aptly can describe as "savages."

Unlike the coastal villagers of mainland New Guinea, the little black men and women of Biak bear no evidence of missionary influence nor any schooling. Fierce, unkempt, virtually unclothed, they came out of the hills ten days after the Americans landed.

They came not in friendship. They came in fear, seeking sanctuary from a hell of explosives. They carried their infants, their crude fishnets, their javelin-like spears, needle-pointed.

Americans Gain 5 Miles in Italy After Capturing Montieri

Rome, June 27 (AP).—British troops, striking heard at the core of German resistance some 80 miles above Rome, have recaptured the ruins of Chiusi in heavy fighting and tonight were slugging with infantry and tanks in the outskirts of Castiglione del Lago, 9 miles northeast of Chiusi, on the shore of Lake Trasimeno.

Chiusi has been the site of the bitterest fighting since the fall of Rome. South African troops entered the town a week ago, but were thrown out by a German armored counterattack.

Similarly stubborn enemy resistance had slowed but not stopped American and French divisions advancing along an approximate 70-mile line between Chiusi and the west coast. Fierce fighting was in progress southwest of the key city of Siena, 31 miles below Florence, with Yank forces reported gaining another 5 miles after occupying the rubbled town of Montieri.

American units, advancing directly up the west coast toward Livorno (Leghorn) and Pisa, put 10 miles between themselves and the useful port of Piombino, captured two days ago. A driving rain again was slowing the advance.

In the Perugia sector, directly north of Rome and east of Lake Trasiemeno, Eighth Army troops carved out limited gains and captured high ground overlooking Magione, on the eastern shore of the lake.

Churchill Reports on Casualties

London, June 27 (AP).—Prime Minister Churchill told the House of Commons today that total British casualties from the time of the landings in Italy until the fall of Rome amounted to 73,122 killed, wounded and missing.

The period covered represents a total of about 10 months of fighting ended June 4.

Churchill said his figures included 14,331 killed, 47,955 wounded and 10,825 missing.

Figures on air force and naval losses during this period were not available.

Churchill said the over-all casualties for the British forces for the first four years of the war totaled 667,159—with 158,741 killed, 78,204 missing, 159,219 wounded and 270,995 prisoners.

Civilian casualties for the same period were 109,101 and merchant marine casualties, 30,314, he said.

The American Army casutalties in Italy from September 9 to June 15 were 64,992, of whom 11,610 were killed, 44,426 wounded and 8956 missing.

Caen, the "hinge" of the German eastern positions.

"We are continuing our attacks against the last remnants of organized opposition by elements of the enemy's forces holding out in Maupertus airfield, east of Cherbourg, and in the northwest tip of the peninsula," the communique said.

The American capture of Cherbourg and the rapid British attack, which gave the Germans no rest, came almost four years to the day after Hitler had announced that "the war in the west is finished."

Canadian artillery and the big guns of Allied warships aided the push toward Caen and the flanking movement below it. An Allied spokesman said the Allies were "infinitely" better than the Germans in artillery, and predicted a savage Allied aerial onslaught on the enemy should he try to mount a big counterattack.

German broadcasts betrayed fears of new Allied "leap frog landings" along the French coast now that Cherbourg has been eliminated along with the big coastal guns and Germans had been manning around it.

A dispatch from Twenty-first Army group headquarters said that 100 German tanks had been destroyed and 200 knocked out, at least temporarily, since D-Day. Probably a large proportion of the tanks were wrecked in Montgomery's new drive, which appeared to be building rapidly toward a full-scale test of Allied and German armored strength.

Timetables Third Phase

In this third phase of the careful Allied timetable in France, the British were hitting toward the open country behind Caen, and the Germans were fighting savagely. Marshal Erwin Rommel had consentrated almost all the armored troops at his disposal—four divisions, including the crack Twenty-first Panzers and the Twelfth S. S. Panzers—in an effort to hold the British.

Chergourg fell to the American Seventh Corps under Maj. Gen. Joseph L. (Lightning) Collins, who commanded American troops at Guadalcanal. The corps consists of the Fourth, Ninth and 79th Divisions, it was disclosed by Lieut. Gen. Omar N. Bradley, who hailed the seizure as "a magnificent job."

"The fall of Cherbourg ends the second phase in the champaign of liberation," said an earlier Allied communique.

Labor battalions already were sweeping the debris from Cherbourg streets, and minesweepers were clearing the harbor for Allied convoys to come with countains of supplies and thousands of fresh troops.

It was expected that Allied supplies and troops could start moving through Cherbourg within 48 hours, at least on a limited scale, with the stream expanding greatly within a week.

Without permitting disclosure of how many American divisions now are in Normandy, General Bradley said that Maj. Gen. Leonard T. Gerow was commanding the U. S. Fifth Corps, which has advanced to the Caumont-St. Lo region in the middle of the front. Bradley decorated both Gerow and Collins for distinguished service in the landings.

Naval headquarters reported a battle between German trawlers and minesweepers and British light coastal forces near the Channel island of Jersey Monday night, with one enemy vessel believed sunk and "considerable damage" done to others.

land lines," on a stretch 200 miles long.

The early capture of Minsk, Lepel and Polotsk, last big German bases on Russian soil, was presaged by the speed and power of the Soviet advance.

Late Soviet dispatches said Russian troops already were more than 30 miles west of Vitebsk and within 30 miles of Lepel.

The Soviet offensive against Finland increased in pitch, with more than one-quarter of the Leningrad-Murmansk railway liberated and Soviet shipping already reported using the Svir River, which links Lakes Ladoga and Onezhskoe (Onega).

The Finns asknowledged Russian capture of Aunuksenlinna, on the Aunus Isthumus, and said Soviet pressure was hesvy all around Lake Ladoga, with battles raging in the Karelian Isthmus north of Heinjoki. A Russian break-through north of Kall also was admitted.

You've got the land, the tools, the know-how, and big bunches of people who want to pull together. No country ever had more. And you've got great and friendly nations who want to pitch in with you, like they pitched in with me and Joe to fight the Japs and the Germans. Take your hats off to the past, but take your coats off to the future. I didn't look back when I struck the beaches. Is it tougher at home for you fellows?"

Ky. Democrats' 9 Conventions Back 4th Term

At the Fifth District meeting a picture of Vice President Henry Wallace was taken down amid considerable applause. The action was not explained.

St. Louis Ace Gets Medal of Honor

Supreme Headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Force, June 27 (AP).—Col. James H. Howard, St. Louis, Mo., fighter ace, was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor today for the single-handed attack on more than 30 German fighters threatening a Flying Fortress formation raiding Oschersleben January 11.

Lieut. Gen. Carl Spaatz, commander of the U. S. Strategic Air Force in Europe, pinned the decoration on him.

Howard bagged a probable total of six Nazi planes when he dived into the swarm of fighters.

Senator Joseph H. Ball of Minnesota.

It is likely that Dewey will have been nominated before Bricker's State of Ohio is reached on the roll call. Altogether the New Yorker has something like 840 votes in the bag. Something like 500 of these are expected to be cast before New York is reached on the call. The Empire State's 93 would give Dewey more than the 529 needed to win.

Martin Beckons Democrats

A huge suite has been set aside for Dewey in the Stevens, and the Dewey clan is coming in from all parts of the country. The Governor's father-in-law, Oris T. Hutt of Sapulpa, Okla., arrived today and observed that "things look pretty good for Tom."

At this morning's session of the convention, the epermanent chairman, Representative Joseph W. Martin, jr., of Massachusetts made an outright bid for the support of conservative Democrats.

He said that the coming presidential election was not merely a fight to put Republicans in office, but to "emancipate the Democrats."

He went on to say:

"The Democratic party which we have known and with which we have honorably struggled on so many fields but which was a party of Americans who believed in the American system, has lost its power over its own destiny.

"Prisoner of the New Deal"

"The Democratic party has been captured by a minority whose philosophy it despises. It has become a prisoner of the New Deal. Thank God, some of its leaders realize this and have the courage to revolt.

"This election, curiously, is not merely a fight to put the Republicans into office but, by a strange twist of fate, it is also a fight to emancipate the Democrats."

Martin, who would become Speaker of the House if the Republicans win in November, added:

"Our policy is a positive policy. This policy is to protect, to defend and to perpetuate our free, constitutional form of government, our free enterprise system of economy, our system of free society."

As the morning session was breaking up, the song leader seemed to sense that the convention was going to get away a day early, for he led the delegates in singing "School Days."

O'Connell Sworn In As Patent Court Judge

Ambrose O'Connell was sworn in yesterday as a judge of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals.

The oath was administered by Presiding Judge Finis J. Garrett in the presence of O'Connell's wife, daughter and other relatives and friends.

O'Connell, native of Uttumwa, Iowa, but a resident of New York, is a former vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee and a former First Assistant Postmaster General.

en of energy, of dignity and of independence."

"The easiest task of government," he said, "is to suppress individuals, subject them to bureaucracy and subsidize them to lean on government—or a political party. If a government has enough power, it can always do that."

5. "We are faced already with the gigantic problems of making a peace where freedom can live."

Developing that last point at length, Hoover said it is obvious that nationalism is on the rise and that "ideas of world supergovernment, no matter how idealistic, are already dead from these cold blasts of realism."

"Peace must be based upon cooperation between independent sovereign nations," he said.

It is also obvious, he declared, that there must be "some sort of world organization to preserve peace."

If the general assembly of this organization is not to be "a mere debating society," Hoover continued, "it should be slit into three divisions—one for Europe, one for Asia and one for the Western Hemisphere.

"And each region should be given the primary responsibility for peace in its area before the central council is called upon. Especially should that responsibility be imposed on Europe where the dangers of world wars come from."

Balance-of-Power Diplomacy—

Hoover said President Roosevelt's peace methods, according to published reports, are termed the "great design" by the President. He remarked that a peace plan under the same name was proposed by Henry IV, a French monarch, some 350 years ago and "it has similarities to Mr. Roosevelt's idea."

"So far as these published descriptions go," Hoover said of President Roosevelt's reported views, "this method is power politics and balance-of-power diplomacy.

"That is not the diplomacy of freedom. And worse still apparently the United States is to furnish the balance between Britain and Russia. If that be the case you may be sure that we will sooner or later gain the enmity of both of them.

"The basis of lasting peace for America must be friendship of nations not brokerage of power politics.

"America needs a change in administration to get out of personal power diplomacy."

Argentina broke relations with Germany and Japan on January 26, and opposition to this move was reported to have been a factor in Ramirez' fall.

Much concern has been apparent here over Argentina's failure to take anti-Axis steps during the four months her government has not been recognized by this country and many officials have said privately that a more vigorous attitude should be adopted toward Argentina.

Economic sanctions have been studied as well as possible diplomatic moves. Observers said that undoubtedly the policy of concerted action by the American republics will be followed when a decision is made.

Three Veteran U. S. Divisions Won Peninsula

London, June 27 (U.P.).—Three crack American divisions, one made up of hardened veterans of the Mediterranean campaigns, were revealed today as the troops responsible for the victorious push up the Cherbourg peninsula.

The divisions, comprising the Seventh Army Corps under Maj. Gen. Joseph Lawton Collins, whose wife lives in Washington, are the Fourth, under Maj. Gen. Raymond O. Barton; the Ninth, under Maj. Gen. Manton S. Eddy, former national commander of the American Legion, and the Seveny-ninth, under Maj. Gen. Ira Wyche.

The Fourth Division was the D-Day assault force. The Ninth is famous for its African campaign, and for its Sicilian fighting.

The Seventy-ninth is the "mystery division" to Allied supreme headquarters. In file cases full of information on other divisions, there is not one line on the Seventy-ninth—and little on its commander.

In the last war, the Seventy-ninth, however, was made up primarily of troops from Pennsylvania and Maryland and was known as the Lorraine Cross Division. It arrived in France early in 1918 and fought valiantly in all the closing battles of the war.

The Fourth Division, dubbed the "Ivy Division" because of the way in which it is referred to by the Roman numerals I and V, saw plenty of action in the last war.

The Ninth Division, under Eddy, is composed of men from every State in the Union and the District of Columbia.

MURDER

the night of his arrest by Detective Sergeant Richard Felber in the presence of several other police officers.

Felber testified yesterday that the statement was obtained voluntarily from Fisher and without any trouble. No violence of any kind was used on the man at any time following his arrest, he said. This testimony was verified on the stand by Detective Sergeant E. E. Scott and Pvt. Walter Vogelsang, who were present at the questioning.

Denies Intertional Robbery

Fisher also told the jury that about a week before the slaying he was called into his "boss's" office where John Berkeley told him that Miss Reardon had complained about his work. "He told me not to pay any attention to her, that she was half-cracked," Fisher explained. Berkeley, however, explained on the stand that he had not used that phrase but had told the defendant not to say anything to the lady because she was "peculiar."

The Negro janitor denied that he had intentionally robbed Miss Reardon of a class ring. He said that the ring had come off her finger while he was dragging her and that he stuck it in his pocket and forgot about it until he got home.

The argument between Miss Reardon and Fisher, which the defense maintains made him fly into a rage that resulted in the crime, was described by the defendant.

The following questions were asked by Houston and answered by Fisher:

Q. Who started the conversation that morning?—A. Miss Reardon opened the conversation.

Q. What did she say to you?—A. She asked me if I dusted. I said, "Certainly, doesn't it look like it? I always try to keep it clean."

Q. Then what happened?

A. She said that was what I was being paid for. I asked her if she was trying to get me into trouble. That's when she called me a nigger and I got angry and smacked her.

No Resentment

Fisher was asked if he had resented the complaint Miss Reardon had made about him to Berkeley and replied that he had never thought about it.

The defense promised the court that Fisher's testimony would be followed by that of psychiatrists who would testify concerning the sanity of the defendant.

The murder weapon—a piece of blood-stained firewood—was introduced as evidence yesterday morning. The jury examined the club, which consisted of four large pieces and four splinters tied together—some of which were said to have been found near the spot where the woman had been beaten.

Special Investigator David Ennis of the homicide squad testified that he had pieced the club together like a jig-saw puzzle. The task took many hours, he said, because he had to search through all the wood in the library fireplace and pick out the stained splinters.

An examination of the weapon was made by Dr. Richard Rosenberg, deputy coroner, who told the jury the stains on the wood were blood, but that he had been unable to determine whether they were the blood of a human or an animal. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald, who performed an autopsy on the slain woman, explained that her death had been caused either by clubbing or the strangling or by both. The knife wound was not fatal, he said, since the blade had barely pierced the skin of her throat.

Stores Cram Labyrinth of Fallen Fort

By Don Whitehead

Cherbourg, June 27 (AP).—An inspection today of Fort du Roule disclosed stocks of ammunition and a huge inventory of stores worth millions of dollars.

And all the mysteries of this fort, the Germans' strongest bastion guarding the southern approaches to Cherbourg, have not yet been solved by American forces, now swarming the underground chambers driven into a cliffside and reinforced by steel and concrete.

The deep tunnels held enough food, ammunition, guns and other supplies inside the deep tunnels to have kept a large force supplied for months. There are thousands of cases of cognac, fine French wines, champagnes and liqueurs, and vast stores of everything from shaving cream to torpedoes.

Nazi Still May Hide

Officers have not yet found the passages leading to all the series of levels, and there is the possibility Germans may still be inside the fortress. But they made no move to destroy it before our troops broke in.

Corpl. James Bresnahan of Waterbury, Conn., led a group of us through one of the great series of chambers, 300 feet below the cliff top where the Yanks first broke into the fortress. Thick steel doors were blasted open, and inside was an intricate, amazing installation.

The main tunnel was 200 yards deep, 38 feet high and equally wide. Off the main tunnel were other rooms of the same height and width and about 50 yards in depth. An overhead crane was electrically powered for moving heavy weapons or ammunition.

An electric light system was found, along with telephones, automatically controlled ventilators and water mains.

By lantern light we walked through the tunnels. They were littered with clothing and equipment of the defenders.

Double-decked bunks ran along the sides of most of the tunnels where the men lived. Their belongings were strewn about. Some of the Germans had wrapped packages and addressed them to friends and relatives in Germany, but were caught before they could send them out. They contained pieces of silks and satins, cigars, tins of food and trinkets.

Maj. Glenn Plumlee, Birmingham, Ala., walked into a great chamber stacked high with ammunition of all kinds, from shells for huge guns to small arms cartridges.

One chamber that had been occupied by German marines contained 12 large torpedoes hanging on the walls in racks. Down the main corridors the walls were stacked high with boxes of radios, combs, lotions, soap, matches, cigarettes, chewing tobacco, playing cards, toothpaste, shaving cream, razor blades and hundreds of other items.

Much of these huge stores will be a blessing to American troops, who are short of items available in quantity inside Fort du Roule.

GENERAL

and emerged again with Schlieben behind him.

With him and Hennecke came more than 300 Germans, all with their hands in the air, and 500 more straggled after them.

Under a heavy escort of military police in jeep and on motorcycles, Schlieben was driven to the command post of General Collins. Schlieben, with two aides, stepped out of his jeep. He pinched before a battery of more than 20 photographers, who had hurried to headquarters to await him. He strode stiffly up the stairs and was presented to the general, who in his shirt sleeves was at his desk.

The two generals shook hands solemnly as the flashlights popped.

A little later, Schlieben and the admiral had a meal with the general to whom they surrendered after washing in the general's headquarters.

Defender Honored

New York, June 27 (AP).—The Berlin radio told the German people last night that Adolf Hitler had awarded the Knight's Cross of the Iron Cross to Rear Admiral Walter Hennecke, the German naval commander in Normandy, for preparing the "destruction of Cherbourg." The broadcast, reported by the Federal Communications Commision, boasted that the "feat" was "unprecedented in the annals of coastal defense."

Decoy Fleet Used By Allies to Fool Germans on D-Day

New York, June 27 (AP).—The Allies sent a decoy fleet into the Calais-Boulogne area on D-Day to draw the German air force away from the actual beachheads on the Normandy coast, Comdr. Anthony Kimmins, British naval intelligence officer reports.

Ships in the "diversion" fleet did not suffer much damage, he said in an interview with the New York Times.

Kimmins said he believed the Germans expected the invasion in the Calais-Boulogne section and added: "When the Germans' final defense plans are found, I think we will discover that they thought we were coming in there."

Col. Collins to Head WMC Placement Unit

Lieut. Co. John K. Collins will become director of the bureau of placement of the War Manpower Commission, July 1, Chairman Paul V. McNutt announced yesterday.

Colonel Collins has been chief of the labor branch of the army service forces and is being inactivated by the army for this post.

Allies Capture Mogaung, Trap Big Force

Kandy, Ceylon, June 27 (AP).—Chinese and British Chindit forces have captured the Japanese stronghold of Mogaung in north Burma and trapped a large force of Japanese between there and Kamaing, 20 miles to the northwest, Allied southeast Asia headquarters announced today.

At the same time, American troops advanced another 100 yards into the northern sector of Myitkyiana, 35 miles east of Mogaung, and are near contact with Chinese attacking from the west. Other Chinese have established a bridgehead on the west bank of the Irrawaddy River just east of Myatkyina, and the Chindists have attacked at Maingno of the eastbank of the river, in an are south of Myitkyina. The city thus is almost entirely cut off by the Allies.

The Chinese Thirty-eighth Division and the Chindits, aided by fighter-bombers in strength that the Allied command called "overwhelming," took Mogaung Monday after a three-day assault.

"Import For Railways"

The city is an important rail center in the wilds of upper Burma and has served as a supply center for the Japanese forces throughout the Hukawng and Mogaung valleys.

Japs Start Flanking Movement

Chungking, June 27 (AP).—The Japanese, while pressing a frontal assault from the north toward the strategic Hunan Province railway town of Hengyang, have begun a flanking movement to the southeast apparently aimed at cutting the railway south of Hengyang a Chinese communique indicated today.

The Chinese high command said severe fighting with heavy casualties on both sides was in progress, but most quarters in Chungking were of the opinion that much stronger opposition would be needed if the Japanese were to be prevented from seizing all the Canton-Kankow railway, which would give them a through north-south line.

proved by the committee, on motion of Miss Mary Donlon, of New York, vice chairman of the group, and Thomas E. Dewey's personal link with the committee. Senator Taft said he "assumed" she spoke for Governor Dewey.

Taft's Interpretation

Taft then proceeded to give newsmen a broad interpretation of the "peace forces" line in the foreign plank. A former isolationist, his construction of the term marked a definite advance for the party's international wing.

"Peace force means military force," said Taft. "It could also include civil sanctions. I do not think it means international policing, but it would cover almost anything else. It means what 'peace officer' means."

Still denying there was any "ambiguity," the resolutions chairman said he did not believe the 16 Republican governors understood the committee's purpose, and what was in many of the planks, when they presented their protests last night.

ground conditions favorable. It sagged where heavy opposition and difficult going confronted the troops.

The northern slope of Mount Tapotchau was still hel by the Japanese at last reports. There also were enemy pockets of resistance in caves or dug into the cliffs.

Using small artillery and flamethrowers, the Americans cleaned out the pockets and caves one at a time. Each, reported Handleman, was a deadly small-scale battle in itself.

Complete air and naval superiority aided the invaders.

There were sporadic night raids by enemy planes, probably based at Tinian Island, three miles south of Saipan. American artillery and warplanes were pounding Tinian constantly, however.

With Magicienne Bay principal anchorage on the southeastern side of Saipan, in American hands, the invading forces had a new base for supplies. Shippin already had pushed boldly and unmolested into the harbor.

Overtime Pay Claims Threaten to Flood GAO

The General Accounting Office will be piled high with claims for back overtime pay from the thousands of night workers who are paid a differential. A decision last week by the Comptroller General opened the way for night workers to collect several millions in back overtime pay since 1934. The comptroller said that overtime pay for night workers must be computed on the base pay plus the differential. War, Navy, Government Printing, Bureau of Engraving and Printing and all the other agencies have been paying the day overtime rate to night workers. The comptroller made his decision in a GPO case and now several other agencies have asked if his decision will apply to their employes. Presumably it will.

Several members of Congress threatened to try to stop the back payments by legislation, but the decision became known as Congress was prepared to recess and nothing was done. This leaves the door open for the employes to collect reasonably soon some of the back pay. GAO will approve claims that can be paid out of appropriated funds for two years back. Claims filed to cover longer periods must be approved by GAO and specifically appropriated for by Congress. Employe unions are urging their members to file claims immediately. However, GAO hopes that the agencies will get together, estimate the amount of back pay due, and ask Congress for a direct appropriation. The agency is loaded down with work and it may put off the claims to see if Congress acts to offset the decision by legislation as it did recently in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing case.

If Governor Dewey is elected President, there's at least one New Deal lawyer who won't lose his job. In fact, he'll be in line for promotion." He's Philip Brownell, who recently was appointed assistant general counsel in charge of enforcement at the War Labor Board. He's the brother of Herbert Brownell, a manager of the Dewey campaign at Chicago and reputed to be the man closest to the expected GOP nominee. Phil Brownell came here in 1941 and he has served on the legal staffs at lend-lease, Board of Economic Warfare, and War Production Board. He's a native of Nebraska and was graduated from the Yale Law School in 1936.

Governor Warren of California, in a keynote speech: "Nowhere in its vast domain has it been satisfied with merely one bureaucrat if by hook or crook desks could be found for two." He lambasted the bureaucrats and bureaucracy which will become one of the major domestic issues of the campaign. But the issue won't be limited to the GOP. The Democrats, too, will blast the bureauscrats. It's popular and thought to be politically wise . . . but neither party will mention anything like this: The Navy announcement yesterday that suggestions from employes in the first three months of this year will save the taxpayers $1,750,000. . . . The Civil Service Commission yesterday asked Congress to legalize the positions of personnel directors in Federal agencies. Each large agency has a personnel office and a director of personnel with the exception of the Justice Department.

No middle position will long be tenable . . . I do not propose that we shall fail. I do not say this lightly, for I realize that we shall rise to this responsibility only at the cost of strenuous effort and most ruthless willingness to subordinate other considerations . . . Finally, and this is the whole essence and core of our problem, we must attain such intellectual mastery over the recorded experience of this Government that we are competent to transmute it into a living [illegible]."

The memo is crammed with $10 words and phrases.

Priority Asked For Dozen Md. Road Projects

Annapolis, Md., June 27 (AP).—Twelve Maryland highway and bridge-construction projects rated as "urgent" by the State Roads Commission, were today placed before the facilities review board of the War Production Board for approval for 1944 construction, Governor O'Conor announced.

The Governor said the 12 projects upon which priority has been asked of the Federal authorities are ones of vital importance to the convenience and safety of the citizens of Maryland generally.

Is First on List

Number 1 of these projects, the Governor disclosed, is the Halethorpe grade-crossing elimination and equally urgent, he said, is the Frederick-Hagerstown highway relocation to include the paving of 17 miles of roadway which will constitute the first lane of a proposed dual highway.

Other projects include the relocation and reconstructoin of a section of the Reisterstown road on the route to Westminster and reconstruction work on the Baltimore-Washington road from the city line to Laurel.

On Eastern Shore

On the Eastern Shore, the commission has asked approval of relocation and rebuilding of the narrow section of Route 213 from Mount Holly, a few miles east of Cambridge, to Big Mills, on the way to Vienna. Similarly, Route 13 from Pocomoke to the Virginia State line would be included.

Realignment of the Queens Chapel road and the replacement of the Landover Bridge at Dodge Park are items on the list in the Washington area, the Governor said.

17 Maryland Men Wounded in Action

Seventeen more Marylanders were reported wounded in action by the War Department yesterday.

Those wounded in the Mediterranean area included Pvt. Clifford A. Barkman, Croom Station; Pfc. James R. Dunn, Hyattsville; Pfc. Marvin W. Kidwell, Brentwood; First Sergt. Theodore Kusmaul, Henderson, and Pvt. Lemoine R. Liller, Cumberland.

Pvt. Edgar D. Ludlam, Ocean City; Pfc. Bernard A. Onizuk, Elkton; Pfc. Osmond L. Poole, Hagerstown, and Tech. Sergt. Richard B. Swan, Cumberland.

Hearing July 14 In Alexandria Hit-Run Case

At the request of Robinson Moncure, defense counsel for Flossie Robinson, 44, Negro, of North Royal st. extended, Alexandria, who is charged with driving under the influence of liquor and hit and run, Judge James Reece Duncan yesterday ordered the date of her hearing in Alexandria Civil and Police Court extended until July 14. Bail was set at $1000.

She was arrested Monday by Officer Claude S. MacDonald who was directing traffic at Mount Vernon ave. and Russell rd. He said he saw her automobile strike an 11-year-old boy riding a bicycle. Then failed to stop.

Treated for minor injuries, including cuts on the back, at the Alexandria Hospital, the boy, Ronald Mountcastle, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry M. Mountcastle of 2705 Dewitt ave., Alexandria, appeared in court yesterday when the trial date was postponed.

Churches Vote Heavily Against Sunday Movies

Charles Town, W. Va., June 27. While pastors declined to make public authoritatively the counts on the theory the matter was simply a straw vote and without official significance, it was learned churchgoers in four Protestant churches here Sunday had voted about 10 to 1 against a proposal for Sunday movies in this city.

In one congregation it was stated not a vote was cast in favor of the proposal; in another fewer than 10 were for it.

The matter had been submitted in a form that promised a schedule of movies not to conflict with churches' services, and the management of the theater had promised to give a substantial portion of the receipts to a public recreational project.

Winchester Officer Wounded in France

Winchester, Va., June 27 (AP).—Capt. Mifflin B. Clowe, jr., of Winchester, whose outfit was among the first to land in France, was wounded on June 8 by fragments of a German shell which inflicted wounds in his left arm and hand and right knee, a V-mail letter from the officer has advised his wife.

Nurse Eager To Get Back Into Action

Waynesboro, Va., June 27 (Spl.). At home for the first time in more than 15 months, First Lieut. Elizabeth Engleman, Army Nurse Corps, victim of paralysis said to have been caused by exhaustion and overwork with the Eighth Evacuation Hospital in Italy, wants to return to active duty once her recovery is complete.

Lieutenant Engleman, daughter of Mrs. Lena B. Engleman, of this city, was returned to the States in November, 1943, having been flown here for treatment at Walter Reed Hospital, Washington, D. C. Later she was sent to Hot Springs, Ark., for further treatment and is now able to walk with half crutches.

A surgical nurse, Lieutenant Engelman trained at Maryland General Hospital and at Cornell University and was on the staff of Martha Jefferson Hospital, Charlottesville, before entering the service in September, 1942. She was a member of the University Hospital Unit composed of doctors and nurses from this area and was aboard the supply ship lost while crossing from North Africa to Italy. Through efforts of Virginians last fall, money was raised to replace all supplies lost. She was one of the first group of Army Nurses to go into Naples, Italy.

Following her visit here, she will return to Hot Springs for further treatment.

Arlington Pilot Flew All Day To Aid Landing

Second Lieut. Merle R. Capp, a P-47 Thunderbolt pilot, son of Lieut. Col. and Mrs. George R. Capp of 2008 North Smyth st., Arlington, was a member of the group commanded by Lieut. Col. Frederic C. Gray of Abilene, Tex., which flew from the predawn darkness of D-Day until nearly midnight that night. His fighter group covered the landing of paratroopers on the northern coast of France and viciously attacked scores of ground targets near the Allied army beach zone.

Despite the handicap of cloudy, rainy weather, Lieut. Capp helped to maintain the friendly fighter cover above the troops, doing effective strafing and bombing, and he shared in the destruction of an enemy locomotive during the fighting.

Previous to D-Day, Lieutenant Capp had flown on 22 missions to continental Europe, most of them as escort to huge formations of B-17 Fortresses and B-24 Liberator bombers.

Migrant Labor Plan Backed By 7 States

Annapolis, Md., June 27 (AP).—Six Atlantic Coast States have joined Maryland in accepting a plan for the recruitment of migrant labor this summer, Governor O'Conor disclosed today.

Delaware, Florida, North Carolina, Pennsylvania, Virginia and West Virginia have agreed with Maryland to the proposal recently adopted by representatives of the States at a meeting in Raleigh, N. C.

Under the agreement the Governors of the States will cooperate with the War Manpower Commission and U. S. Employment Service officials in securing an adequate supply of migrant labor to take care of crop harvesting needs in the various States.

The Governor said that Maryland will need approximately 14,000 additional workers to take care of the harvesting of tomatoes, beans and other crops as well as to help in the canning of these essential foods this year.

To accommodate the workers from out of State, Maryland has an emergency housing fund of $8000 to be allotted under the direction of the council of defense for temporary housing wherever needed, the Governor stated.

WLB Rejects Point Breeze Wage Accord

By the Associated Press

The War Labor Board unanimously disapproved yesterday a general wage increase agreement between the Western Electric Co. and an independent union of the company's Point Breeze plant, Baltimore, contending that it was contrary to the wage stabilization program.

The WLB declared that the agreement, affecting 6535 employes, would "tend to unstabilize wages in the area and interfere with the most effective prosecution of the war."

In its place, the board suggested that the company and the Point Breeze Employes' Administration (independent) consider shortening progression schedules and increasing starting rates in lower job grades.

The case was taken to the board at the request of other Government agencies after the agreement had been disapproved by the Philadelphia regional board.

Baltimore management and union officials withheld comment pending a study of the decision.

Barringer Warns of Possible Shortage of Good Steel Scrap

Frederick, Md., June 27 (AP).—The steel industry may face a serious production crisis because of a shortage of high grade scrap if the war continues through next winter and steel operations are maintained at the present 95 to 100 per cent of capacity, Edwin C. Barringer declared today.

Barringer, president of the Scrap Iron and Steel Institute of America, Washington, told officers from the Army's Third Service Command installations that "inventories of both suppliers and consumers (of scrap) have fallen 400,000 tons in the first four months of this year," and that the "visible supply of purchased tons" amounted to 4,300,000 long tons.

Industry uses about two million long tons per month, he continued, pointing out that there is therefore about 11 weeks' visible supply of scrap remaining.

Last year, said Barringer, the steel industry used approximately 55 million long tons of scrap metal, with this year's estimated consumption the same. This compared with 27 million tons used in 1917, peak year of World War I, and 38 million tons in 1937, best peacetime year, he added.

Regarding the composition of metal and the importance of scrap, Barringer commented that "you can safely say that one-half of all the metal you see is scrap. It is good (practice) metallurgically and economically."

Barringer spoke at the opening session of a two-day conference called to discuss methods of conserving Army material as a means of "decreasing the taxpayer's burden."

Another speaker, Col. R. W. Biefkohl, Baltimore, Service Command director of supply, reported that sales of domestic and overseas salvage by the Army during the first half of 1944 "will approximate $1,250,000 and it is estimated that for the latter part of 1944 this figure will increase substantially."

Tom O'Brien, regional organizer for the Atlantic States, told the group that application for a charter should be postponed until a meeting with a larger and more representative group can be held. Proponents of the union hope to interest the Victory Cab Co. drivers in active participation.

Named at a larger meeting of approximately 60 per cent of the drivers in the city on June 21 who voted to start organization immediately, the cab drivers' committee is headed by Charles Neary who addressed the group yesterday. Other members are E. H. Seeley and E. G. Arthur.

New, Deadlier Robots Hurled At England

Southern England, June 27 (U.P.).—Germany's robot blitz of southern England gained momentum today under cover of Channel storms as the Nazis hurtled over what appeared to be a new type of the winged bombs—a type which gives even less warning than its buzzing predecessor.

Taking advantage of winds of near-gale intensity which pinned down most Allied fighters, the ersatz Luftwaffe groped its blind flight over the Channel to blast at the English countryside.

Some of the bombs were shot down but others broke through to explode with a deafening roar, causing casualties and damage.

Some of the doodlebugs sent over Monday night and today appeared constructed so that the interval between the time the motor dies down and the explosion has been cut to as little as 1 second. In earlier models, this interval varied from 10 to 15 seconds.

Ground gunners, however, were scoring increasing successes and in one sector alone eight of the flying bombs were shot down during the night and day.

The first heavy bomber to shoot down a robot plane was the flak-damaged American Liberator "Me Worry?"

"I saw what I though were two fighter planes coming right at us—one about 1000 yards away and the other a little farther off, Sergt. Jack Barron of Des Moines, Iowa said. "Then I saw that flame shooting out behind the nearer one and realized it was a doodlebug.

"When the flying bomb was about 600 yeards away I could see it would pass behind and above us. It was coming so fast that by the time I had my trigger switch on, it was 250 feet above us and about 300 yards back. I started firing and shot it down with a few bursts."

Md. Delegates Now United Behind Dewey

Chicago, June 27 (AP).—Maryland's delegates to the Republican National Convention, their differences resolved, united today behind the presidential candidacy of Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York.

Several of the delegates, who had avowed their intentions of supporting Governor John Bricker of Ohio, fell into line to make the delegation unanimous in supporting Dewey.

The agreement to suspend hostilities and work together in the future followed a conference between Mayor Theodore R. McKeldin of Baltimore and his long-time political foe, Paul Robertson, Baltimore City Republican chairman.

The leaders plan to function as a team in conducting the Dewey campaign in Maryland, regarded certain of nomination.

The first result of the peace pact was the decision to cast Maryland's 16 votes for Dewey on the first ballot.

The decision was preceded by a caucus of Robertson with three delegates affiliated with him, in which he urged that advocacy of Bricker's nomination be dropped. Robertson's delegates finally agreed. They were Sheridan F. Smith and Eric Frederick of the Third Congressional District, and Donald Boyce of the Fourth. Robertson was named from the Fourth, also.

ABC Board Buys Bank Building

Richmond, Va., June 27 (AP).—The Virginia ABC Board has purchased the 10-story Grace American building here for $275,000 and ABC offices are expected to be moved to it by January 1.

Officials estimated the building can be paid for in 10 years from rentals now paid by the board and in addition save some $9000 a year in rentals annually.

The board now pays more than $30,000 annual rental in the Central National Bank Building, and also rents outside space for its laboratory and duplicating section at an added cost of $2700 a year. A renewal of the bank building leases, which expire January 1, would have meant an increase in rentals, officials said.

GOP Promises To Reorganize Labor Dept.

By Ben W. Gilbert

Chicago, June 27.—Asserting that the GOP is the "historical champion of free labor," the Republican National Convention yesterday promised American workers a revitalized labor department headed by a labor representative, an expanded system of social security, and speedy reconversion to peace to insure jobs for all.

The broad program suggested in the Republican platform appeared to be an effort to steal New Deal thunder as far as organized labor is concerned, but the planks did not go as far as the AFL and CIO desired, nor were they as broad as the program suggested by Wendell Willkie, 1940 GOP standard-bearer, in a series of pre-convention newspaper articles.

As approved by the convention, the platform blasted New Deal administration of labor laws, but announced party acceptance of the purposes of the National Labor Relations (Wagner) Act, the Wage and Hour Act, the Social Security Act and "all other Federal statutes designed to promote and protect the welfare of American working men and women," and promised "fair and just administsration of these laws."

The platform changed the Administration with "emasculating" the Department of Labor by scattering labor agencies throughout the Government—a pet peeve of the American Federation of Labor.

Concession to AFL Seen

The assertion that a representative of labor should head the Labor Department is regarded as a concession to the AFL, which probably would get the plum, in the event of a GOP victory.

"Regardless of the professed friendship of the New Deal for the workingman," the platform stated, "the fact remains that under the New Deal American economic life is being destroyed."

"The New Deal has usurped selfish and partisan control over the functions of Government agencies where labor relationships are concerned. The continued perversion of the Wagner Act by the New Deal menaces the purposes of the law and threatens to destroy collective bargaining completely and permanently."

The "freezing of wage rates at arbitrary levels and the binding of men to their jobs"—a reference to wage controls by the War Labor Board and manpower regulations by the War Manpower Commission.

The platform charged that executive order regulations (wage controls) had repealed Republican initiated legislation abolishing "contract labor" and peonage, and that a "labor front" has been gradually created "as but one of the New Deal's steps toward a totalitarian state."

"Political Trickery" Hit

Alleged administration favoritism to the CIO was rapped in pledging "an end to political trickery in the administration of labor laws and the handling of labor disputes; and equal benefits on the basis of equality to all labor in the administration of labor controls and laws, regardless of political affiliation."

Tito Will Run Yugoslav War In New Regime

Bari, Italy, June 23 (Delayed) (AP).—King Peter of the Yugoslav government-in-exile and Marshal Tito of the Partisans have agreed on a unified cabinet in which Tito will have direction of the military forces, according to reliable reports here.

Gen. Draja Mihailovic, Yugoslav Chetnik leader and former War Minister in Peter's government, was not consulted, it was understood.

As reported here today, the agreement followed these lines:

Ivan Subasic, premier of Peter's recently reorganized regime, will head the cabinet, with two portfolios to go to Tito's partisans, one of them being that of War Minister. The National Committee of Liberation, the partisan control body, will remain in existence.

The agreement is to continue for the duration of the war, with post-war government arrangements left open.

Further warships and merchantmen of the royal government now under Allied protection will be made available to the newly coordinated Yugoslav forces, and gold deposits now credited abroad to the royal government will be used jointly to press the war against the Germans.

Subasic, who now has returned to London, reached the agreement in discussions with Tito at the marshal's secret headquarters inside Yugoslavia. King Peter, who came to Italy to be available for consultation, was said to have approved the agreement fully. A formal announcement is expected after details are worked out in London.

3750 Fascists Fired in Rome, Poletti Says

Rome, June 27 (U.P.).—Col. Charles Poletti, Allied military government commissioner in the Rome area, announced today that four persons had been arrested here on security grounds, and 3750 others had been dismissed from civil service posts since liberation of the city, because of Fascist records.

He said that from 500 to 600 more persons would be arrested shortly.

Among those held by the Allied government is Prince Gabriele d'Annunzio, related to D'Annunzio, the poet. Others arrested include Pietro Caruso, chief of police of Rome under the Nazi regime, and bankers, journalists, high executives in Fascist organizations, radio commentators, and Black Shirts who participated in the march on Rome.

Poletti announced the formation of a purge commission comprised of 12 members—two from each of the six official Italian parties—with which all persons dismissed or arrested may file appeals.

The commission will hear appeals, and help weed Fascists from civil posts, Poletti said.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 3 pints a day.

When disorder of kidney function permits poisonous matter to remain in your blood, it may cause nagging backache, rheumatic pains, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent or scanty passages with smarting and burning sometimes shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Doan's Pills.

Poison Murder Of Two Bared By Inquiry

New York, June 27 (AP).—Anguished death-bed pleas of "don't touch my feet," uttered 28 months apart by a mother and daughter, were the tenuous clews which led the Brooklyn district attorney's office to announce today that a double slaying had been committed by strychnine poisoning.

Mrs. Gussie Berkowitz, 48, died of what was described at the time as a coronary occlusion, or blood clot, on August 15, 1941. Her daughter, Mrs. Harriet B. Feldman, 29, died on December 9, 1943, of an illness diagnosed as "tetany superinduced by pregnancy."

Another daughter, present when both women succumbed, remembered and repeated their similar cries.

The two bodies were exhumed and autopsies performed. The report of Dr. Alexander O. Gettler, city toxicologist, announced: "Enough strychnine to poison six persons."

Members of the family have been questioned and released. Assistant District Attorney E. A. Heffernan, said the investigation by police and his office had reached a dead end, but "That murder had been committed is certain."

A third Berkowitz daughter, Mrs. Beatrice Hofberg, a registered pharmacist, was given credit by Heffernan for starting the investigation.

Mrs. Hofberg, suspicious of the similarity of symptoms shown by her mother and sister as well as the similarity of their cries, consulted medical books and found, Heffernan said, that acute muscular reaction, and tenderness and pain in the extremities were symptoms typical of strychnine poisoning.

Heffernan said Mrs. Berkowitz left an estate of $50,000, with the largest share going to Mrs. Feldman. Mrs. Feldman, he said, left an insurance policy of $5000, of which her husband, Benjamin, was the beneficiary.

Gen. Hershey's Son Becomes 'Boot' Marine

Johnston Has Business Talk With Stalin

Moscow, June 27 (AP).—Eric Johnston, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, talked business with Premier Stalin for 2½ hours in the Kremlin late last night and emerged with the declaration that the conversation had been "very successful."

The interview was confined largely to questions by Johnston about future trade between the United States and the Soviet Union and direct answers by Stalin.

However, Stalin also gave his guest the following statement for publication:

"American business and American labor have done a remarkable job of production for the war. American agriculture also has performed unusually well. American machines of war and American food have contributed to the successes to the Red army in its victories.

"The United States Government has played a major role in the development and coordination of this production and also in fostering cooperation between our two countries."

Besides Stalin and Johnston others at the conference were translator Vladimir Pavlov, Foreign Minister Vyacheslav Molotov, U. S. Ambassador W. Averell Harriman and Edward Page, second secretary of the American Embassy.

"I cannot tell you what he said except for this particular statement," Johnston stated, referring to Stalin's formal statement.

Johnston declared he was particularly surprised at what he termed "the deepness of the marshal's knowledge of America, particularly its production. His knowledge is accurate and very complete."

Johnston left today for the Urals to inspect Russia's inland industrial empire.

Pilots' Flights At Bolling Field Mapped by a Girl

Six days a week from 8 a. m. untill 5 p. m., Pfc. Helen K. Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Clark, 409 Baltimore rd., Rockville, Md., keeps the Army pilots flying by presiding over the pilots' map and charting room at Bolling Field, D. C.

Believed to be the only Wac in the Army Air Forces engaged in that type of work, she outlines projected routes of flight for pilots. Her completed work tells the pilot all he needs to know about the terrain over which he will fly.

Training for such work began long before Pfc. Clark enlisted in the service in June, 1943. Following her graduation from National Art School, Washington, she joined the Army Map Service, where she made maps for the Army Engineer Corps.

Fireworks Ban Applies to Whole Of Maryland

Baltimore, June 27 (AP).—All fireworks are forbidden unless approval for their display has been obtained from the insurance department, State Insurance Commissioner Lawrence E. Ensor reminded the public today.

Possession and discharge of fireworks is punishable by a fine of not more than $50. The sale of fireworks in violation of the act is punishable for each offense by a fine of not more than $200.

Permits for special displays of fireworks will be authorized only where the application has been made at least ten days in advance and only after careful investigation, Ensor said.

I'll hand it to folks. They've had the patriotism to hold down their speed. But imagine war restrictions ended. Man, you'll see old cars overdoing till they can't chug another mile. You'll see every repair shop crowded for months, but I'm figuring to duck that! Of course, I couldn't see everything coming when I originally had this engine OIL-PLATED. I'd simply overheard that any engine forms dangerous corrosive acids. It made sense to try protecting the engine by OIL-PLATING it with Conoco Nth motor oil. I switched to Nth. You can suit yourself about thinking it's the only oil or not, but first read the whole label. You'll see where Conoco Nth oil's special synthetic fastens OIL-PLATING to your engine's fine inside finish. Then OIL-PLATING is really sort of a special surface to block steady acid corrosion. When repairs might be just a promise, and you can only pray for a new car, you're way ahead with your engine safely OIL-PLATED by Conoco Nth.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

By Drew Pearson

HERE IS HOW carefully the Dewey boys are playing their cards to win. Long before they came to Chicago, they had dumped $12,000 into California's different Congressional districts, as against only $3000 in all the rest of the USA.

Also, long before they came to Chicago, they had put California's big, amiable Governor Earl Warren very much on the spot. To win, they figure they must carry California. A Dewey-Warren ticket, they figure, will be a cinch.

But the more they have talked Warren for Vice President, the more skittish privately the Governor has become. The heavy Democratic vote in recent California primaries, plus the defeat of Roosevelt critics there, have the Warren camp worried. Some of his friends warn that, should he run for Vice President and fail to carry his own State, he would be politically all washed up.

In the 1916 wartime election, Charles Evans Hughes went to bed thinking he had won California and was President-elect of the USA. Next A. M. he awoke to find that he had lost California and the Presidency.

In this wartime election, Dewey and GOP strategists are not going to bed with false illusions. Already they are pumping money into the Golden State.

Here is the list of donations the GOP congressional campaign committee has pumped into California districts.

Representative Rolph, San Francisco, $1000; Representative J. Leroy Johnson, Stockton, $1000; Representative Albert Carter, Oakland, $1000; Representative John Anderson, San Juan Bautista, $1000; Representative Bertrand Gearhart, Fresno, $1000; Representative Ward Johnson, Long Beach, $1000; Representative Carl Hinshaw, Pasadena, $1000; Representative John Phillips, Banning, $1000; Representative Norris Poulson, Los Angeles, $1000; Jesse Mayo, Angels Camp, $1000; Fred J. Hart, Salinas, $750; Chesley M. Walter, Oakland, $750; George Faulkner, San Francisco, $500.

In contrast, only three other congressional districts in the entire USA have received any GOP money, two in New York, one in Oklahoma.

Note—The dough for California came from about the same crowd which also shelled out heavily for Dewey: John D. Rockefeller, $3000; Alfred Sloan of General Motors, $3000; Mrs. Sloan, another $3000; Jeremiah Milbank of Metropolitan Life, $2000; C. B. Goodspeed of Chicago, $5000.

Bricker 'Treason'

TOM DEWEY'S loyal legions foamed furiously when they opened their mail the other morning to find there reprints of a most uncomplimentary article about their candidate, written by Richard Rovere in Harpers Magazine and entitled "The Man in the Blue Serge Suit."

Chief foamer was stanch, devoted Walter R. Suppes, delegate from Johnstown, Pa., who picked up the telephone and asked Harpers Magazine who had received permission to reprint "The Man in the Blue Serge Suit." Harpers replied that 5000 copies had just been mailed to the Democratic National Committee.

Whereupon irate delegate Suppes telegraphed Democratic National Chairman Hannegan: "You tried to discredit and belittle Dewey at time when national convention is appraising candidates. Many delegates are resentful at this unsponsored and anonymous attack through the mails on Dewey. Persons who took this means to injure his selection in Chicago owe the 2000 Republican delegates who received this anonymous mail an explanation and apology."

To which the Democratic National Committee's Paul Porter replied:

"Democratic National Committee did obtain reprints of Harpers article for distribution among Democratic Party workers, but has not yet made this distribution, as reprints arrived here only this morning. We get it from authoritative Republican sources that your inquiry should be more properly directed to Governor Bricker's headquarters."

Since then, stanch, loyal Deweyites have been frothing at the Brickerites.

Vice Presidential Merry-Go-Round

U. S. CHAMBER'S ERIC JOHNSTON is the only vice presidential candidate running his campaign from outside the U. S. A. . . . In far-off Russia, Johnston, being received by Stalin, talking business with Molotoff, is making a tremendous impression on the powers-that-be at this convention. They reason the GOP may need some one with a strong internationalist record to offset isolationist charges against Dewey in the fall. . . . Johnston has plenty of supporters, a great flair for publicity, is a super-salesman. . . . He got his start as a house-to-house vacuum cleaner salesman after the last war, knows how to put his foot in the door, keep it there and sell himself. . . . In addition to his job as president of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Johnston runs a big electrical contracting company and has three other booming war businesses. . . . Born in the District of Columbia, he is at home there.

Illinois' Gov. Dwight Green, genial candidate of Colonel McCormick's Chicago Tribune, isn't very excited about being a Vice President, but his sponsors are . . . Green is happy in Illinois, spends all the time he possibly can in Chicago, where he enjoys the bright lights, the broad boulevards and the night clubs. Since becoming Governor, Green has quieted down a lot . . . Loyal to the Tribune, which has been pushing him along in politics, Green makes speeches tailored for him in Colonel McCormick's ivory tower . . . Green has become the darling of the so-called intense nationalists on the American political scene . . . Actually, he is a good lawyer, shrewd businessman and would prefer to be a Senator.

New England's Lev Saltonstall came out here mostly for the ride, but he's a candidate for Vice President if anyone wants him. Son of an old Back Bay New England family, he has a good record as Governor of Massachusetts, pulls well with all racial groups, has an amiable disposition and is a fast developing back-slapper. . . . Saltonstall laughs at his blue-blood family tree. His first Revolutionary ancestor did no fighting during the war for independence, but was in favor of George Washington's side . . . The rest of the Saltonstall crowd were all Tories.

Gov. Earl Warren, like Dewey, got his start as a prosecutor. He hasn't been off the public payroll in 25 years. A big-family man, Warren has sired six children, who have turned the staid old Governor's Mansion in Sacramento on its ear. It now reverberates to the noise of the eight Warrens busily enjoying the fruits of life in sunny California . . . Warren has always run as a nonpartisan candidate, entered on both the Republican and Democratic tickets. Herbert Hoover likes Warren, but doesn't think he is ripe to be a presidential candidate . . . Warren plays his politics straight, with no special twists. As a middle-of-the-roader he has won a lot of Democratic votes . . . Warren has made a plea for labor support, but left-wing minded AFL and CIO leaders on the West Coast are very coy about the Governor, using him, being used by him, but never committing themselves to Warren's support.

Former Governor Stassen's backers are happy about the way things are going . . . They're not going home saddened even if their man shows little strength . . . Actually, Stassen backers are aiming for '48, after their hero comes home from war service and the soldiers and sailors of this war start voting in earnest . . . They figure Dewey has to make it now or fold his tent permanently . . . Stassen has an airtight Minnesota delegation behind him, made plenty of friends in Nebraska, the Dakotas, Kansas, Illinois and Wisconsin before getting into uniform . . . Stassen has seen plenty of action as flag secretary to Admiral Halsey, should see plenty more as action against Japan is stepped up.

Montgomery To Sell OCD Blankets, Cots

Disposal of 2000 cots with blankets purchased by the Montgomery County Commissioners for OCD use in the county was authorized yesterday by the board of commissioners following the recommendation by Judge Albert E. Brault, director of Montgomery OCD.

"It is now apparent that all these items will not be needed for any emergency which can reasonably be anticipated," stated Judge Brault in his written request for the board's action.

Further curtailing activities of OCD, the board reduced the salary of William Prescott Allen, property officer of miscellaneous supplies and fire fighting equipment from $125 a month to $50 a month. It terminated the job of Woodruff L. Clark, assistant to Allen who handled bookkeeping and maintained property records at a salary of $50 a month. Brault said with "no further need for acquisition of supplies" the work has been reduced and can be therefore under Allen's care as custodian of property.

OCD Consolidation

The blankets and cots will be sold at cost with a certain amount kept for the County Home. The board also approved Brault's plans to consolidate the Silver Spring Report Center with the Main Control Center of OCD housed in the new county building at Silver Spring.

Mrs. A. V. McLaughlin, Bethesda, was appointed a senor public health nurse in the Montgomery County Health Department. She will be in charge of tuberculosis control work and receive an annual salary of $2000 plus 6 cents a mile for travel. The Tuberculosis Association will pay $280 of the salary and the balance of $1720 will be paid by the county. The board accepted the resignation of Miss Gwendolyn Ireson, public health nurse who has been on leave of absence without pay since April 1, 1943, due to poor health.

District Appropriations

A total of $269,650.77 was appropriated for the eastern and western suburban districts housed in the county buildings in Silver Spring and Bethesda, respectively.

The eastern district will receive $118,245, which includes $10,000 for administrative work, $15,121.49 for miscellaneous $67,123.96 for road maintenance and $25,000 for street lighting.

In the western district the items totaling $151,405.32 include administrative, $13,000; miscellaneous, $25,698.17; road maintenance, $80,707.15 and street lighting, $32,000.

The board declared a holiday for all employes under the commissioners jurisdiction next Tuesday, July 4, and voted to meet Monday at 10 a. m.

Permits to hold charity carnivals in Silver Spring were granted the following organizations on the designated dates: Takoma Park Lions Club, July 3 through July 15; Kensington Volunteer Fire Department, July 31 through August 5 and Rosensteel Council, Knights of Columbus, August 7 through August 19.

YESTERDAY'S ANSWER

Nelson B. Bell About the Showshops

Bing Crosby Changes Pace in Next Picture; Notes of the Theatre

THERE IS A NEW SORT of Bing Crosby picture coming along that deserves to have a date reserved for it on any judicious showshopping calendar.

It is called "Going My Way" and concerns itself in an infinitely warming and humorous way with the story of two Catholic priests and the simple people of their parish who touch their lives out of the ceaseless stream of New York's polyglot.

BING CROSBY

Don't be deluded into the belief that because its principal characters are two members of the cloth, "Going My Way" must be some pious preachment loaded down with obvious and depressing "lessons," "morals" and the like. The lessons and the morals are there, all right, but their presence is so agreeably veiled in humor, song and homely drama that the spectator is aware only of being happily entertained by one of the most artfully designed films of the year. It was previewed yesterday.

Major credit for all this devolves lightly and joyfully upon Leo McCarey, who authored the original story, produced and directed, from a script contrived by Frank Butler and Frank Cravett.

Paramount has given Crosby, Rise Stevens and Barry Fitzgerald —one of the finest of the living actors who contributes one of his finest performances—a splendid supporting cast and the picture an appropriately realistic production.

And that is all you are going to be told about it here, until it follows the current "White Cliffs of Dover" on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater. All, that is, except to save that open date.

In view of the War Bond Premiere of "Follow the Boys," at RKO-Keith's Theater tonight at 8:30, the current "Days of Glory" will not be visible to the naked or any other kind of eye on 15th Street after 5:30 o'clock this afternoon. The house will close at that hour, to reopen for the evening's gala at 8. Regular afternoon prices will prevail as long as the box-office remains open for "Glory."

When Eileen O'Dare and her mother dropped by the desk the other afternoon, it came out that there was ample reason why the amazingly intrepid Miss O'Dare's acrobatic dancing should have reminded me of Miriam La Velle. They are the only two I have ever seen who defy the laws of equilibrium the way they do. There is a reason for that, too. The two youngsters grew up together in Philadelphia, did their studying and practicing as a team and are still bosom friends. Mrs. O'Dare, herself a former artiste, was explaining how she used to motor the kids from Philadelphia to New York every Friday for their lessons and then drive them home again next day. They may not be identical twins, but they are identical dancers. Miriam now is appearing in Boston in George White's "Scandals." Eileen is playing her first, big-time, metropolitan date at the Earle. Small world, is what I always say.

The Line of March

The weekend will be planting quite a flock of new screen attractions in the downtown area.

Following tonight's bond premiere, Keith's will be sailing right along with "Follow the Boys," a musical cavalcade of "show business," which will inaugurate its regular Washington first-run engagement tomorrow morning.

O Friday, at the Earle, Columbia's whimsy, "Once Upon a Time," will supplant "The Mask of Dimitrios," and on the same day the Metropolitan will be first-running "Between Two Worlds," with John Garfield and Paul Henreid costarred and Sydney Greenstreet, Edmund Gwenn, George Tobias, George Coulouris, Faye Emerson and Dennis King, among others, in support.

Beginning this morning, the Little Theater will revive "The Woman of the Year," costarring Katharine Hepburn and Spencer Tracy.

"White Cliffs" and "Two Girls and a Sailor" will be holding over at the Palace and Capitol, respectively, with "Pin-Up Girl" Betty Grable taking over at the Columbia.

Although Jane Pickens happily is continuing a second week at the Capitol, along with "Two Girls," the remainder of the stage bill will be new.

The National Negro Opera Company has casts in rehearsal for its forthcoming productions of "Faust," "Aida" and "La Traviata," to be presented successively at the Watergate on Saturday, Sunday and Monday nights, July 29, 30 and 31. Fortified with stars to fill the principal roles and experienced choruses, the company reports that it has been assured the cooperation of the National Symphony Orchestra.

In case you have been worrying about him, the public relations department at Fort Riley, Kans., has made known that Mickey Rooney, recently inducted into the armed forces, has arrived there to begin training with a cavalry unit—"horse cavalry," if you want a direct quote.

Va. Firm Dehydrating Potatoes for Feed

Winchester, Va., June 27.—The National Fruit Product Co., through an arrangement with the Surplus Commodities Corporation, is dehydrating potatoes and converting them into stock feed.

Already 100 cars have been processed. In addition in taking some of the surplus crop off the market, the process is said to furnish a feed substitute for the depleted stocks of corn products.

Loose-Leaf Notebook

New York, June 27.—A few days ago a plane arrived at LaGuardia Field bearing a group of dignitaries from overseas. They were the Egyptian delegation to the International Monetary Conference. The delegates representing Greece and Iran also were there. The airport officials extended the customary greetings and asked if there was anything they could do for the new arrivals. "Yes, there is," replied the monetary experts. "The first thing we need is to get to a bank which has an exchange window. We need some money."

CLARK GABLE

Clark Gable has turned down the first five scripts submitted to him by MGM. He insists that his return to the screen must have a war theme. . . . Stanton Griffis has left Sweden, where he was sent on a Government mission to halt SKF's trade with Germany, and now is in London. . . . Count Kurt von Reventlow, former husband of Barbara Hutton Grant, boasts that he made photstat copies of all the letters that passed between his former wife and their son, and that he will introduce these letters at the trial. . . . Lieut. Col. Henry Miller, who was reduced three grades in rank by General Eisenhower, has left the Florida hospital and is back in New York.

Carroll Glen, the violinist and wife of pianist Sergt. Eugene List, headed a troupe of entertainers who went to Walter Reed Hospital. They were invited to do their show at the White House after they left the hospital. The entertainers did their routine at the White House—all but one man. Mrs. Roosevelt asked him "What do you do?" "I tell gags," he replied. "I told some over at Walter Reed, but I don't think I should tell them in the White House." . . . "The President should decide that," Mrs. Roosevelt suggested. The President decided: "What's good enough for the wounded men at Walter Reed Hospital is good enough for the White House."

A suggestion was made, after the invasion of Italy, that Maj. Gen. James A. Ulio, the Adjutant General, be sent to Italy. The appearance of an American general of Italian descent, was the feeling, would lift the morale of the people of Italy. But then it was discovered that General Ulio is not of Italian but of Irish descent . . . Hedy Lamarr probably will switch from MGM to RKO in September . . . Churchill's hint, followed by a denial, that the Nazis once had made an attempt to invade England must be confusing to the two million war workers who, for the last four months, have been seeing the Navy's industrial incentive film, "Battle for the Beaches." In this film, narrator Quentin Reynolds tells of Hitler's abortive invasion try, and pictures show the RAF bombing and straffing of the Nazi invasion fleet.

Mike Romanoff, the Hollywood restaurateur, fancies himself a chess expert. A group of his friends told him of a West Coast visitor who had wagered that he could beat Romanoff. "We've collected an $800 pool and bet it on you," they told Mike. The visitor was brought in and the chess board was set up. Mike's friends whispered advice — play conservatively, don't be afraid, let him attack, be rash, be cautious, use the Capablanca opening, etc. His opponent then proceeded to stare at the chess board for 45 minutes, without uttering a word or making a move. Romanoff finally screamed at the "expert" opposing him: "Dammit, will you make the first move?" "I," replied the other, who had been hired to do this, "always take an hour for each move. I must visualize the entire game."

Pietro di Donato, author of "Christ in Concrete," will be in Hollywood soon to work for De Mille . . . John Garfield has asked to tour the Pacific bases. While he was in Europe he entertained a group of Yugoslav Partisans . . . Warner Bros. will assign four of its stars to the movie adaption of Ellin Berlin's "The Land I Chose." The script will be written by Leo C. Rosten . . . The July issues of Reader's Digest and Magazine Digest carry condensations of the same book, Jean Burton's "Heyday of a Wizard."

Walter Catlett, the veteran stage and screen comic, has been in Hollywood these past few years. He works a few days each month and earns more than enough to keep him content. Recently, a Broadway producer, in need of an experienced and able comedian, offered Catlett $1500 a week to appear in a musical in N. Y. Catlett turned him down. "But $1500 a week," the producer repeated. Catlett pointed to the slacks he was wearing. "These cost $7, and I have another pair. That's all I need out here in California."

Both WPA and PWA will deliver their dying gasps on July 1. On that day the handful of employes still remaining in those bureaus will be transferred to FWA . . . Leeds Music Co. will publish, on a nonprofit basis, the French underground's "Song of Liberation." . . . While the Daily Worker is attacking Leo Cherne's "The Rest of Your Life," the Soviet Embassy has become one of the largest purchasers of this controversial book written by the young, brilliant economist.

HEDDA HOPPER

Right for Rosalind!

Hollywood, Calif., June 27.—It's just come to light that Columbia bought Ruth Gordon's play, "Over 21," for Rosalind Russell. It's a better vehicle for her than "My Sister Eileen." It's just pure, unadulterated hokum, but funny. . . . Harold Lloyd's trip to New York isn't only pleasure. He has a deal cooking to tie up one of the best young actors in the business as his own, with Harold producing pictures for him . . . Gregory Peck has been called our "Phantom Actor." He hasn't yet been seen on the screen, except in "Days of Glory." I've decided (and don't hoot me down until you've seen him in "Keys of the Kingdom") that he's the one to play John Barrymore in "Good Night, Sweet Prince." He's handsome, has a fine voice, charm, and, glory be, he can act . . . Lana Turner's on a bond tour, so John Hodiak became June Allyson's escort at premiere of "White Cliffs." . . . Two hundred "Winged Victory" soldiers found themselves back in civies, but only for opening shot in the picture. Scene wasn't in the stage play.

ROSALIND RUSSELL

He's An Actor

Sweet story about C. Aubrey Smith, who's 80. A friend of mine was having tea with him, while Aubrey and his wife debated whether he should go back to New York and do another play. My friend inquired, "Why? Would it mean much more money than films?" "No," he replied, "not nearly as much. But I think it would benefit my career. I don't want to get in a rut here." Next day he was knighted by the British. When I hear some young flibberty-gibbet kid, who's just finished his first part, popping off because they didn't star him overnight, I'll remember this story . . . When Buddy de Sylva signs that Paramount contract giving him the same deal Hal Wallis has, it will seem like a vacation. He'll be responsible for only three pictures a year, instead of 24 . . . Is Helen Gahagan counting her chickens before they're hatched? She's so sure of being elected to Congress that she's offered her hilltop home at $122 a month for two years.

Still Got Job

I inadvertently did Joe Breen out of his job when I wrote about Harold Hopper. Harold becomes head of the Motion Picture Society of the Americas July 1, meaning he's liaison man between Nelson Rockefeller and picture producers for South American relations. Joe remains where he is. . . . Hum-m-m-m. Greta Garbo sure is coming out. She wore shorts to Cole Porter's luncheon, but didn't trouble to comb her hair. . . . Anita Colby (The Face) had a gang of males at the Town House in hysterics as she recounted the hazards of chaperoning cover girls to Hollywood. They could do another picture about her experiences.

Puts the Boys First

Kay Kyser isn't buying a home now. He and Georgia Carroll will redecorate her tiny hillside abode, which they'll occupy, and then think of a real home when they return from a tour of the South Pacific. . . . The Jimmy Meltons celebrate 15 years of married life June 29. . . . Carole Landis is expecting her husband any minute now. . . . Hedy and John Loder are off on another week's vacation to Arrowhead. . . . Jeanne Crain and June Haver did a whale of a bond-selling business through the Middle West. One reason for the tremendous reception was auctioning off two white fillies at every show. Girls also made personal appearances with their picture, "Home in Indiana."

It's Been Seven Years

The Nelson Eddys were late for Jeanette MacDonald and Gene Raymond's wedding anniversary. Nelson played host to 250 boys at the Masquers club . . . I had such fun with Lauritz Melchior and Jose Iturbi. Melchior, happy with his first Metro part, said, "I don't have to act. It's just me." His smile wins you hands down. When I suggested he repeat his burlesque of Frank Sinatra in Sinatra's picture, "Anchors Aweigh," he said, "Who cantell? Maybe they will ask me." . . . The Buddy Rogerses were present. They and the Raymonds honeymooned together at Honolulu seven years ago. Also in uniform were Frank Lloyd and Bill Keighley. Bill's wife, Genevieve Tobin, has been very active at the Washington, D. C., Stage Door canteen. I asked how she liked ours. To date no one has asked her to come . . . Ernst Lubitsch is happy as a child. He can smoke two cigars a day.

Here and There

Pinto Colvig (the voice of Pluto, also Grumpy), while touring Canada for "Snow White," was given the key to the city by the mayor of Vancouver. It turned out to be a dog tag and gives him the right to bark anywhere, any time . . .

Teheran Fulfilled

Step by step the master plan agreed upon by British, American and Russian leaders at Teheran last December is being carried out. First came the Allied offensive in Italy which sent Marshal Kesselring's entrenched divisions reeling to the north. The breaching of the Atlantic Wall by a powerful amphibious force consisting of Americans, Canadians and Britons came next. And close on the heels of this development was the launching of a Russian offensive in Finland. But it was not until last week, with the opening of the Red army's drive on Vitebsk that the full dimensions of the Teheran plan began to be visible. Today no fewer than four Russian armies are attacking on a 250-mile front, while a fifth army has struck in the Ostrov sector, 165 miles north of Vitebsk.

Marshal Stalin has thus been as good as his word. He promised his American and British colleagues at Teheran that, after the invasion of France had begun, the Red army would get in motion, and in numbers and with a striking power never before displayed. That promise he is now fulfilling. Nor has the full power of the Red army yet been unleashed. In the Polish and Romanan sectors great numbers of Russian troops are poised for the signal to advance, and this time the push will be carried forward till the German army has been completely crushed.

In view of what is happening today, it is well to recall the doubts and suspicions that existed for a long time regarding Russia's intentions. There were those who said that Stalin was preparing to make a deal with Hitler. There were others who gloomily predicted that once the Russian army had reached the 1940 boundaries of the Soviet Union, it would halt in its tracks. These and similar predictions are being belied by events. What we see today is the coordination of military strategy on a continental scale by armies that are widely separated in space but firmly united in a common purpose. Thus the last hope the Germans have had—the hope of a negotiated peace resulting fro mdisunity among the Allies, is being shattered on the rocks of Anglo-Russian-American solidarity. Let us maintain it!

Interior Lines

In nothing is there so rapid a rate of obsolescence as in popular concepts of military strategy. Consider, for example, the bugbear that our enemies possess the enormous advantage of interior lines of communication. Interior lines they do possess, to be sure. Theoretically, then, they may move forces at will from the center to the periphery of the area they choose to defend, while we are obliged to pursue longer and more circuitous routes on the outside of this charmed circle. The massing of troops for attack at any selected point should thus be far easier for the enemy than for us.

It is not working out quite this way in practice, however—as the campaigns in Italy and in Normandy have abundantly demonstrated. In both these theaters of war, our aerial superiority has altogether nullified the German advantage of short communication lines. Indeed, it has made those lines virtually unusable. Before the beginning of the big Allied push below Rome, the German front lines were all but isolated from their sources of supply; roads and rails were blasted until they became impassable. The same tactics employed in Normandy were no doubt largely responsible for the German failure to launch any swift, large-scale counteroffensive against our beachheads.

Seapower, no less than airpower, has served to overcome the enemy asset of interior lines and even to turn them into a liability. For through control of the ocean highways, the Allies have been able to mount major offensives against Germany thousands of miles apart. Next week or next month, for all the Germans know, they may open a fourth and fifth front upon the European continent. Meanwhile the Reichswehr's strength must be scattered in anticipation over the whole length of the coastline from Norway to the Mediterranean. It is we, not they, who are now able to concentrate strength upon a selected point of attack.

Much the same situation seems to be developing in the Pacific. At the outset of the Far Eastern war, interior lines undoubtedly gave the Japanese a distinct advantage. By virtue of them they were able to fan out from their home island, while we were obliged to mobilize our strength from clear across the world. But nowadays sea and air power combined are making matters exceedingly uncomfortable for the sons of Heaven. They find us striking in the Marianas before they have recovered their equilibrium from our assault upon the Marshalls. Their avenues of communication are being severed. Even the very center and source of their strength has come under our attack.

The enemy has interior lines, all right. But the fact is that these interior lines have been encircled. And the encirclement, like a noose, is being drawn constantly tighter. It is already constricting Germany, and the Japanese are no longer breathing any too freely. In both cases the interior lines afford fine concentrated targets. The long way around may again be proved the shortest way home.

Republican Challenge

It has been said that the issue before the country is whether there is a Republican Party. In the keynote address before the Republican convention, Governor Warren of California spoke in behalf of a party that is very much alive. He cited some eloquent testimony. Since 1937, Republican members of the Senate have increased from 16 to 37; there are now 212 Republican Representatives, as compared with 88 in 1937; in the same period the number of Republican governors has risen from 8 to 26. Three out of every four Americans, declared the Californian, now live under Republican State administration.

It was this statement of fact that brought perhaps the loudest demonstration in the Chicago Stadium. Well it might. There is nothing like the recital of success to buoy up confidence in more success. The greatest prize at this Nation's disposal was brought that much nearer by the evidence that this country has given convincing proof of adherence to the two-party system. But the Republican Party would be making a fatal error to rely upon the pendulum to put a Republican into the White House. None seemed to realize this more than Governor Warren. His exhortation to effort lay in his espousal of a forward-looking policy befitting these dynamic times. Not once did he use the abbreviation GOP, which, in former days, was always the signal for nostalgic cheering. To look back to days which are now part of a world that no longer exists would be to invite the fate of Lot's wife. Governor Warren, instead, kept his eyes forward, and the gaze had the rapture of a man who, born and reared in California, still feels in his bones the urge of a pioneer. He would even eschew emphasis on the past errors of 11 years of Roosevelt Administration.

Here is the right stance, as it were, for outs who are seeking to wrest the Presidency from the ins in times of revolutionary ferment. The storm will not abate when the shooting is over. It certainly will not be assuaged by any Canute-like appeal to "normalcy." This storm can be ridden only as it is wisely guided, and the guidance must be in the hands of men with the fearlessness to put fresh ideas into execution. In this respect the Republican platform is a springboard for statesmanship on the part of the party's standard-bearer. We cannot agree with Mr. Willkie that in respect to foreign affairs it is lacking in clarity. It is clear enough as a guide to the candidate. It commits the Republican Party, so far as we read it, to leadership in the establishment of a true world polity. No platform can cross all the t's and dot all the i's on campaign issues, particularly on a problem the solution of which depends upon world conference. Only the nominee can do that. Still it is a good thing from the Nation's standpoint to note in the keynote address and in Mr. Willkie's dissent enough Republican resurgence to prevent any candidate from pursuing a line of least resistance in a campaign which falls in the most eventful year in our history.

Yugoslav Unity

Following his conferences with Marshal Tito, the Yugoslav Partisan leader, Ivan Subashitch, whom King Peter recently named as premier of the Yugoslav government-in-exile, has arrived in London to continue his efforts to bring about unity in Yugoslav ranks. How well he will succeed remains to be seen. The chronic differences that have divided the Yugoslavs for a long time have been accentuated and exacerbated by the Tito-Mikhailovitch feud. Yet it is to the interest of Tito's followers as of Milhailovitch's, of all Yugoslavs whether Croat or Serb or Slovene, to combine forces against the common enemy, to work together in harmonious partnership during the difficult days and years that lie ahead. And they must know it.

At the moment Subashitch is the Yugoslav government. He has no colleagues and, for the time being, holds all cabinet posts. Obviously such a state of affairs cannot continue for long. But before any government of national unity can be created, it must have the support not merely of Tito but also of those who view Tito as too much of a Croat and too much of a Communist to be satisfactory to the numerically preponderant Serbs. It is true that in dismissing Mikhailovitch as minister of war and in permitting negotiations to be undertaken with Tito, King Peter has shown signs of leaning toward the latter. But Mikhailovitch's strength in the old Serbian portions of the kingdom is still great, and his followers have to be taken into account. Thus Premier Subashitch's task is not an easy one, and his current negotiations in London will be watched with great interest.

Private Pensions

One of the many forms of tax avoidance encouraged by high wartime taxes is the establishment of private pension funds for highly paid executives. What to do about them is another matter. Private pension funds existed before taxes became onerous, and some of the latter-day funds may be above board.

The testimony of witnesses appearing recently before a Senate subcommittee makes it evident that the whole subject of private pension trusts is in crying need of clarification. Clarification is needed not merely to close loopholes to tax avoidance but to give companies with bona fide reasonable pension plans assurance that they will not be compelled to make radical changes in their scale of benefits. Obviously the temptation is great to set up pension funds for the benefit of highly paid executives at a time when both corporate and individual taxes in the upper brackets are at extraordinarily high levels. For the company's contributions to such funds are tax exempt, while the employe may be more than glad to contribute heavily to build up rights to future annuities not taxable until he receives them. Senator Taft said, for instance, that he understood that the Treasury had approved a plan enabling a man to get a $50,000 pension and that "he is avoiding tax on that $50,000."

It is, of course, up to Congress to decide whether it wishes to set an upper limit to executive pensions paid out of tax-exempt private trust funds approved by the Treasury for the benefit of employes. As the law stands, there is nothing to prevent payments of $50,000 or more. Nor can these large pensions be regarded as prima facie evidence of tax avoidance. For many private pension funds are of long standing, established with a view to "easing" out older men in the upper salary brackets and making way for new blood. Moreover, some large pensions may have been promised to hold highly paid executives who would otherwise have been lured away by more attractive salary offers. In other words, so long as no limit is set on the amounts that corporations may pay their executives, it is at least arguable whether upper limits should be placed on pensions as a condition of Government approval for purposes of tax deductions. As a matter of fact, ultra-high executive pensions are not numerous, and payment of bloated pensions to a few individuals is not productive of as serious abuses as is the practice of setting up pension funds with the intention of discontinuing them after a few years when benefits have become assured for top-salaried employes. Abuses of this kind should be attacked vigorously since expert opinion indicates that there are various untried ways of dealing with them.

At present confusion and uncertainty prevail in regard to the status of private pension funds. The Revenue Act of 1942 undertook to establish safeguards against the maintenance of pension funds discriminating in favor of higher salaried executives. Treasury regulations designed to implement the law call for integration of private pension plans with the benefits provided for lower-paid employes under the Social Security Act. The rulings have brought a flood of protests from companies having plans that fail to satisfy Treasury standards. Treasury officials, moreover, are swamped by the necessity of passing on hundreds of private pension plans to determine whether they are "integrated" in accordance with official rulings and can qualify for tax exemptions. In many cases, the integration formula would, it is stated, compel companies having their own excess pension plans to scale down pension benefits for employes with modest salaries, without necessarily affecting the amounts paid to the top pensioners. Furthermore, every time the scale of social security benefits happens to be changed, application of the Treasury's integration rule will require adjustments in private pension payments.

Obviously the advantages and the value to beneficiaries of private pension systems would be seriously impaired by the scaling of benefits to conform to Treasury rulings likely to be changed at any time. Sometimes revision of pension plans to the disadvantage of beneficiaries becomes a painful necessity. But generally speaking every effort should be made to keep faith with individuals whose living expenditures and savings have been based upon the expectation of receiving definite pension benefits on retirement.

The tangle resulting from the integration ruling is only one of the issues raised by well-meant but misdirected efforts to cope with the undoubted abuses that have already developed or threaten to grow out of wartime establishment of private pension trusts. Revision of the tax laws relating to pension trusts, as well as modification and amplification of supporting Treasury regulations is urgently required. For until action is taken, it appears that abuses will persist and many established private plans with clean records will be jeopardized.

Test For A Liberal

By Malvina Lindsay

Quiz On The Past

THREE QUESTIONS on the past suggested by Federal Union, Inc. afford Americans of today a chance for some revealing stock taking. This organization, which would apply federal principles of the United States Constitution between nations, proposes this self-analysis for citizens:

Had I been alive then, would I have voted for Lincoln in 1860? Helped establish the Union in 1789? Given of my gold to finance Columbus?

As one who (inevitably) regards myself as progressive in thought, independent in action, I accept the challenge. I step self-analytically into yesterday.

The time is 1860. Shall I vote for Lincoln?

"Well, the man is able . . . honest . . . yes, and a good poltician. Right in principle, of course. Really ahead of his time. That's the trouble. It's not safe to arouse those Southern hotheads now . . . might split the Union—even lead to war! Oh, of course, he says he doesn't want war. But there's that house divided speech. Yet, he may be right. I don't suppose a nation can be half free and half slave . . . Still, anything but war.

"If he only had a little more polish! I'm no prude, Heaven knows, but that drawl and those stories—in the White House! What would the British think? Then there's his wife. Very odd, they say. Extremely strong minded. Still of course I wouldn't let things like that influence me. He's really a big man—history may prove it. If only I felt sure he wouldn't take us into war.

"Another thing, that new Republican Party has a lot of wild-eyed radicals in it. It's just as Senator Douglas says, 'Let each State mind its own business and let its neighbors alone.' There's no use stirring up this slavery question. Maybe if we just kept things quiet awhile everything would straighten out. If only we could be sure of peace for awhile . . . peace in our time. That's why maybe . . . much as I admire Lincoln, maybe . . . maybe Douglas would be a little safer."

The time is 1787-88. Should my State ratify the new Federal Constitution?

"The plan is fine enough in theory, but I wonder . . . are we ready for it? After all, a lot of good people, such as Patrick Henry and Lighthorse Harry Lee, are against it. Yes, Franklin's for it, and so is Washington. But there's all that talk about Franklin's getting senile. And the Centinel did come right out and call Washington a born fool. Still I don't believe any of that stuff.

"I can't help but be dubious, though, about a supergovernment over the States. Why it would have to be a policeman for the whole country! And a Santa Claus! Think of the taxes! How could it ever enforce its laws? Suppose there was a Federal police force—wouldn't it try to come into my State and meddle in its business? If we had a super-Legislature, wouldn't all the smart lawyers and moneyed men get control? . . . I wonder if the British could be mixed up in this?

"Yet—something has to be done. We can't go on with all these shootings and mobs . . . and border warfare . . . and bad money . . . and States threatening to go to war. Maybe though that's just human nature. You can't change human nature. I suppose we'll just have another Europe over here—still though we can't let that happen. We've got to try something . . . Almost anything would be better than all this confusion and quarreling.

"Maybe, as Washington says, it's the best that can be done . . . that we have to choose between consolidation or disunion. I can't help but feel we're taking a big chance on it, but . . . I suppose . . . there's nothing to be done but to give it a try."

The time is 1490. Will I help finance Columbus?

"I admit the man has a very interesting idea—to reach the Indies by sailing westward. And—if the world is really round as the scholars seem to think, the scheme's all right in theory. But it just doesn't sound practicable. Oh yes, he's a good talker—like all visionaries and dreamers, but can he produce? Anyway, why didn't the King of Portugal do something? Whey did his committee turn it down? If these hardheaded men didn't think it sound, why should I gamble my money on it?

"Why this man Columbus has been going around Europe for eight years talking about his Great Enterprise! Why hasn't some one taken it up? Who is he anyway? He has no degrees, no scholastic recognition. Besides, if he sailed westward to the Indies it would take at least three years. How would he ever get back?

"It's not that I'm not as advanced as anyone when it comes to new ideas, but you have to be realistic about these things. And as for his talk of finding some new islands on the way, that's just dream stuff—idealism. There are no new islands. No new lands. Everything's been discovered."

World Organization

By Sumner Welles

America Takes The Initiative

THESE summer months of 1944 are the climactic momentum in our battle for victory. They are also the time when the future course of the world will be determined. In the drive for victory, as well as in the drive for future peace, the United States will play a deciding part.

For that reason the initiative taken by the President on June 16, when he announced his proposals for a postwar security organization, cannot be overvalued. The President's announcement has given heart to the peoples of all of the United Nations. Many have become increasingly concerned as invaluable time passed and no agreement upon international organization was reached by the Allied governments.

IT HAS always been clear that the ability of the United States to bring about the creation of that kind of a world organization, which it believes wise and practicable, will be greater before the war is ended than after the victory is won. It is equally plain that the position of this country both with regard to individual peace settlements and with regard to the decisions to be reached to world organization is unique. Unlike the other major powers, we can be suspected of no selfish interests in European peace settlements. All that concerns us is that they shall be just and realistic. For only in that way can they prove to be lasting. In the organization our position is identical.

It is because of these indisputable facts that the eyes of the peoples of all the United Nations have for so long been turned to Washington. They have been waiting for that sign of leadership which has now been given.

THE PRESIDENT'S proposals cover four main points.

The establishment of a court of justice will be generally regarded as essential in any organized international society. The need for it will not be debated.

The President disposes of the impracticable projects for superstate international police forces which have so frequently been urged. He makes it plain that this Government favors organizational arrangements for the maintenance of adequate national forces by member countries which would be employed by joint agreement when international police measures become necessary.

A congress, or assembly, comprised of representatives of all the nations taking part in the international organization is stipulated by the President. This is, like the court, an indispensable requirement. But any realistic appraisal of the conditions which will exist in the world for an indefinite time after the war will lead to the conclusion that such a congress or assembly can be little more than a forum through which each nation can publicly appeal to world public opinion. Until world reconstruction and world stability have been achieved, it is futile to imagine that such a body could be granted any real power or authority.

For that reason the fourth of the main objectives cited by the President, the creation of an international council, including the four major nations and "a suitable number of other nations" elected annually by the congress, or assembly, constitutes the crux of the entire proposal. The manner in which this problem is finally solved will determine the efficacy of the world organization. Whether or not public opinion throughout the United Nations wholeheartedly supports the international organization finally created will very largely depend on the nature of the authority and rights granted to the smaller nations appointed to the council.

IT WILL BE this council which will in reality be charged with the responsibility of maintaining peace in the postwar period. To it will be intrusted the shaping of the course of events in the years to come. The steps which it takes will decide whether a peaceful, progressive and prosperous world can ultimately exist.

The basic question of course is whether the council shall merely be a mouthpiece for Great Britain, the Soviet Union, and the United States, or whether in all questions, other than purely military questions involving the utilization of the police forces of these great powers, the lesser powers are to have a real and not merely a nominal voice.

The issue is fundamental. It could not have been more clearly set forth than in an editorial in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch of June 18:

"No grand alliance can hold together without the trust and confidence of lesser powers . . . Small nations . . . know from past experience that power itself is no guarantee that it will be justly wielded. . . . It is a case of being spared the role of pawn in the balance of power they fear will follow this war."

THROUGHOUT THE United Nations many are vehemently—and properly—demanding that the defeat of the Axis powers must bring with it the final obliteration of all vestiges of Nazism and Fascism. It is a strange anomaly that some of these same spokesmen are no less earnestly insisting that in the postwar years the three major powers must assume control of the earth, to the exclusion of all other peoples. They urge the destruction of authoritarian government by the few within any country. They simultaneously uphold the need for authoritarian rule by the few within the family of nations.

No world organization can prosper unless free men and women throughout the earth passionately believe in it. That conviction will not be born unless the hundreds of millions who are nationals of the lesser powers are satisfied that "equality of sovereignty of all nations" has become a reality in the new international organization, and is no longer merely a phase.

This great issue must be settled this summer when the promised meeting of the representatives of the major powers is held. The decision then taken by the United States will do much to determine its own future and the future of the rest of the peoples of the world.

Shopping Problem

Now that industry is planning reconversion so that, when the war ends we may resume peacetime production, how about planning the reconversion of Washington retail stores to the level of peace-time decency, politeness and common civility . . . to say nothing of average competence?

Washington is without doubt, and I defy anyone to advance contrary proof, the worst city in America today in this respect. Retail merchants and their hired hands practice an indifference, perverseness and rudeness which would seem to be carefully schooled were it not so obviously due to abject stupidity, laziness and ill-breeding.

I have walked out of all the best stores in the city, not because they did not have stocks but because the help was patently so unaware of the stocks they did have and was manifestly incapable of ordinary interest in the subject.

Washington is full of people away from home. They are trying to do a job here. When they try to snatch an hour or two to do necessary shopping to feed themselves or to cover their nakedness, it is not the war which makes shopping an ordeal equal to the Black Hole of Calcutta or fighting savages at Khyber Pass. No . . . it is the sorry and inhuman spectacle of people hired to do a job acting as if they were hired to keep goods from being sold, and to make sure that every customer goes away properly treated so he will never come again.

Conscientious Objectors

I have read with appreciations the editorials on the subject of the conscientious objector and the use to which he is being put. One seldom finds as thorough an understanding of the merits and deserts as well as the faults, of those who hold this view on war. The Government has been amazingly liberal in its attitude toward us in most ways, but it is good to know that there are a few who believe that your abilities can be put to much better use than they are now, in most cases.

Music For G. I.'s

Last night we had a new form of entertainment in our local theater which was greatly enjoyed by all. Jascha Heifeitz, the celebrated violinist, gave a recital of classical music. He opened with a few numbers from Bach but before playing said, "In the musical language, Bach is like spinach—whether you like it or not, its good for you!"

When he had finished his program, Mr. Heifeitz asked if there were any requests and the response was overwhelming. It seemed as though everyone wanted something different. Some G. I. hollered from the balcony, "Play them all!" and Mr. Heifeitz replied, "I would like to but I figure it would take about 40 months.

It was decided that the greatest number of requests were for "Intermezzoo," "Flight of the Bumblebee," and "Ave Maria." The hearty applause which followed each number showed how much the music was being appreciated, and was ample proof that corny swing and a leg show is not the only form of entertainment which will make a G. I. happy.

Rent Control

You are to be commended on the stand you have taken in the present serious problem of industrial rent control, or better said the lack of it.

Many disturbing examples of this new gouging practice made possible only by an obvious loophole in the "hold the line against inflation" purpose of OPA, are on record with all city, state, and Federal authorities or commissions which have been watching this.

It is incredible that with this volume of information on hand, attempts at obtaining control have so far failed.

It is the writer's sincere opinion that the rent division of OPA is in favor of such controls, since they must feel the facts warrant it. They may have been held back from requesting authority from Congress because the spirit of opposition which Congress has shown against OPA may have made insistence on such legislation unpolitic at this time.

Convention Speech

Chicago, Ill.

YOU WILL HAVE heard the speech of Congresswoman Clare Luce, or can read it in the newspapers. I write preceding its delivery, with an advance copy before me. I choose, however, to say nothing about the speaker—something which, though personal, is justified by the elevation she has come to have in American life; something which includes a strange contrast, an extraordinary instance of the changes time can bring.

I first saw Mrs. Luce at another convention, here in Chicago, 12 years ago—the Democratic convention that first nominated Mr. Roosevelt. But to say she was at a political convention is misleading—for it was not as a member of the convention that she was present, nor even as one much interested in politics, nor much aware of the difference between the two parties. She was at that 1932 convention only as an onlooker, one of a party of guests who came with Mr. Bernard Baruch, including Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, the late Conde Nast of Vogue and Vanity Fair and some others.

WHILE MERLY a guest onlooker, Mrs. Luce volunteered, in a spirit of helpfulness, to do a bit of typing for Mr. Baruch; and it was in this role that I first noticed her. The table on which the typewriter stood was in a corner of the room, against the wall. Mrs. Luce, tapping the keys with amateur slowness, had her back to the room. In the room several persons were engaged in high argument about what should be the currency plank in the platform—it was a suggested draft of this that Mrs. Luce was typing.

What impressed me, or amused and entertained me, was one of those little, off-scene ironies which sometimes, in the midst of weighty matters, intrude into the mind of an observer. Here, striding up and down the room, were Mr. Baruch and the late Gen. Hugh Johnson and some others, busy with the argumentative ponderosities of currency, gold, national debt. And there, in the corner of the room was a slender feminine figure in a blue polka-dot dress—her back and the forward poise of her head suggesting at once concentration and puzzlement—intent upon transcribing fragmentary notes that had been handwritten by Mr. Baruch or some of the other pundits. As I looked, my feeling was, it was a pity, on a lovely June day, that youth and beauty should be chained to the gears of politics and fiscal erudition.

HAD I that day been given a million guesses on what would be the future course and destiny of that slender girl in a polka-dot frock, no prescience of mine, nor of anyone else, I think, would have guessed that 12 years later she would be one of the principal speakers and most important figures at a national convention of one of the two great parties, now as eminent in her own right as any of those for whom, 12 years before, she had transcribed notes.

That she had rare qualities, one became aware upon acquaintance with her. They included crystal clarity of mind, sinewy intellectual muscles. But they included also qualities of utter femininity—such as, added to her charm, might have suggested that her career would be feminine and private, rather than public.

Possibly one might have foreseen the writing career she came to have, preceding her political one. She knew literature. In her youth, out of a deep instinctive taste, she had read poetry avidly, and some of it she kept in mind not merely for pleasure but as truth for the understanding of life. It is this poetic insight—into the heart of G. I. Jim, and G. I. Jim's mother—that makes her convention speech so moving and so true.

G. I.'s Postwar Plans

Somewhere in the stinking jungles of Burma, a buck private is thinking forlornly about home. Thinking of the day when this hellish nightmare will come to an end and he will once more be with his loved ones, back there in the country called Home.

Now this private's desires in life are not what you would call great, in the sense that he would appear selfish. When he gets back, what he would like is a secure job, to have a car, to own his home someday, to raise a family and live like any other responsible American.

Well, seeing that I am that private and I dare say that there are many more fellows with the same thoughts in mind as I have, I am thiking of building my own home when I get back. Knowing very little about the architecture and the construction angle of my problem, I must look toward your office for help. I will be acting in the capacity as the one for whom the house will be built. Therefore, I would deeply appreciate it if you would kindly send me all available literature on the planning, building and landscaping of a house, in the neighborhod of six thousand dollars.

Hoping to secure your cooperation, I remain a thankful G. I.

Sidelights On The Convention

Chicago—WITH SMOOTH professionalism, a triumvirate of New York politicians has stage-managed this show for Thomas E. Dewey. From the beginning everything has been under careful control.

CHILDS

On the 25th floor of the Stevens Hotel Dewey's three musketeers completed the task that was begun a long time ago. One is New York State Republican Chairman Edwin F. Jaeckle, who looks like a genial cross between Santa Claus and Mephistopheles. No. 2 is J. Russell Sprague, who developed a trained political touch as boss of Nassau County on Long Island.

Third, and far from least, is Herbert Brownell, jr., who neither looks nor talks like a politician. He is typical of the young, hardworking, intensely loyal followers Dewey has gathered around him.

CAREFULLY TABULATING the delegate strength from hour to hour, the triumvirate never conceded Ohio's Bricker more than 87 votes. They allowed Lieutenant Commander Stassen not more than 40 at the outside.

When they went to call on the chairmen of the big delegations such as Pennsylvania's, which was theoretically unpledged before the Sunday night caucus, they talked turkey. They were professionals speaking the language of professionals. On Saturday before the convention opened one of the three musketeers said:

"This is over. We're already pointing toward November."

This is typical of the cool-headed men who did the technical job for Dewey. Without stopping to celebrate the victory in June, they were already plotting for victory in the far tougher contest this fall.

How nearly the whole draft-Gov. Warren-for-Vice-President move was set up before Chicago I couldn't say. It may have been as prearranged as the Dewey nomination, although you'd never get a hint of this from the Dewey managers. They have tried to avoid any appearance of dictation.

To win in November, it's going to take professionalism plus the kind of appeal that will enlist independent voters. This last will take more than vague assurances and generalizations.

ONE IMPERATIVE confronting Dewey is the repudiation of the nationalists and the America Firsters who seem to be concentrated here in Chicago. On the periphery of this convention they have raised clamorous voices.

For more than a year Gerald L. K. Smith's America First, We The Mothers and similar organizations have constantly urged the necessity for working within the Republican Party. The Democratic Party, they tell their followers, is hopeless, and it is too early for a third party that will tie in Nationalism, Anti-Semitism and the other trappings of Totalitarianism.

Most people are inclined to dismiss them as screwballs or fanatics, the lunatic fringe which will always be with us, they say complacently.

YET THESE fanatics have helped to nominate a Republican candidate for Congress in Illinois' Sixth District which takes in part of suburban Oak Park and part of less prosperous Chicago. Charles J. Anderson, who sat on the platform with Smith when Smith took over the ballroom of the Stevens Hotel in a pale imitation of the stormtroop technique, talks the whole Fascist line.

He won the Republican nomination by about 2,000 votes and some observers give him an edge over the Democrat. It's an interesting commentary on the politics of our time that his Democratic opponent should be a good-natured machine politician named Thomas O'Brien.

Dewey must repudiate the Andersons and without giving them the slightest excuse to trail along behind his candidacy. The Republican organization in Illinois has talked about replacing Anderson with another candidate but apparently nothing has been done about it.

Mingling with delegates in the hotel lobbies, getting a listener wherever possible, the America Firsters have tried to halt the Dewey rush. The printed propaganda against "Tommy the Cantor," as they call him, has been vicious.

Now it's up to Dewey to speak out with all the conviction that's in him against these hitch-hiking little Fascists.

Boredom Keynote Of Proceedings

Chicago.—THE KEYNOTE of the Republican National Convention is boredom. Newspaper and radio correspondents acknowledge it. Most of the delegates show it.

LINDLEY

The reasons—at least two of them—are obvious. The first is that the proceedings are cut and dried.

Before the first session, everyone knew Dewey would be the nominee and that Warren would get the second place on the ticket unless he flatly refused it.

Even the drafting of the platform was just a tedious chore. There was only one real fight—over the international trade plank. This found Alf Landon, a moderate on the tariff, in conflict with Joe Grundy and other Republicans of the traditional high tariff school. It was kept fairly well concealed, or at least decorous, in a subcommittee.

THE REPUBLICANS naturally are more homogeneous than the Democrats, and more skillful in keeping their disagreements under cover. Usually their conventions are more orderly and less colorful than their opponents', but this one comes close to rock-bottom in dullness.

The second reason I think that most of the professional observers and delegates are bored is that almost everything seems tame in comparison with the war. The latest news from Cherbourg and Saipan seems a great deal more important, especially to men and women with sons in the service, than the proceedings of the convention. The usual political fol-de-rol seems rather tawdry against a world backdrop.

BUT THE subdued tone of the convention certainly does not signify dejection about Republican prospects in November.

The top men in the party are less confident than they were a few months ago. This convention lacks the feeling of supreme assurance which was so evident at the close of the Philadelphia convention of four years ago. Dewey's acceptance speech may give the party workers a lift. But for practical purposes, their present state of mind is healthy. They believe that they have a good chance to win in November but that the result in the country as a whole may be close—even though in some of the West Central States the election is probably as good as over now. They seem to be prepared to work for a Republican victory, and, since they control a great majority of the State capitols and courthouses outside the South, they have a great deal of party machinery with which to do the work.

This practical sense of opportunity is reflected in the handling of the platform. Ideological schisms within the party are being bridged—or at least camouflaged. One gets the feeling that this convention would subscribe to almost anything, within reason, which looks as if it might contribute to victory in November.

UNDER THESE conditions, it is hard to tell from the convention utterances what the Republican Party stands for—where the balance of power in the party lies. Dewey's speeches may be a better guide—but some of them may have to be weighed against the record of the Republicans in Congress.

One clew is, of course, the fact that the party leaders chose to play up Hoover while they shunned Willkie. The wiser leaders will not rest easy until Willkie falls in line, but there is plenty of outright anti-Willkie feeling in the convention. Some of this may be due to pique at his belittlement of the regular Republican politicians, but it is probably due more largely to his views.

There probably is not much enthusiasm for Dewey as a man. He lacks the warmth which so many politicians have. Many of the politicians at the convention would feel more comfortable, I suspect, with Bricker in the White House, but there is plenty of enthusiasm for Dewey as a candidate. He was not picked in a room full of bosses. He is the overwhelming choice of the rank and file of regular Republicans—there is no doubt about that.

Strong Sentiment Is Found For De Gaulle Recognition

By George Gallup
Director American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., June 27.—American voters who have given enough thought to the De Gaulle issue to have an opinion on it, vote overwhelmingly in favor of extending diplomatic recognition to the De Gaulle committee as the provisional government of France.

This is revealed in a Nation-wide survey on the De Gaulle issue, which has stirred up a hornet's nest of controversy both in the United States and in England. Newspapers on both sides of the Atlantic have heatedly discussed De Gaulle's action in demanding recognition, some praising him as a heroic spirit who personifies French resistance, others criticizing him as a presumptuous leader who stubbornly refuses to cooperate unless he can have his own way.

While only about half the voters of the United States can correctly identify De Gaulle and still fewer have followed the De Gaulle controversy closely enough to have an opinion, those who do have opinions are 2-to-1 in favor of granting the French leader his demands.

This is shown in the vote on the following question:

Should the United States recognize the De Gaulle committee as the provisional government of France?

The vote of those who are familiar with the situation and have opinions about it follows:

The Arguments

The argument put forth most frequently by voters who want to see De Gaulle recognized is that he has proved a loyal ally to our cause in fighting the Germans. For example:

"He's been willing to fight on our side from the beginning. . . . While other French leaders gave up and began cooperating with Hitler, De Gaulle never wavared. . . . He seems to have the following of the French people. . . . He is loved in France. . . . His patriotism and courage entitle him to be recognized. . . . We recognize other exile governments who have done less to help us than De Gaulle has. . . . He is a responsible leader."

Those who oppose recognition name the following reasons most frequently:

"De Gaulle hasn't been chosen officially by the French nation. . . . How can we be sure the French themselves want him? . . . We should wait till after the war, it's too early now. . . . De Gaulle has aspirations of a dictator. . . . He is too interested in playing politics."

John L. Lewis Influence Felt At Convention

By a Post Staff Writer

Chicago, June 27.—The influence of John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, has made itself felt at this Republican National Convention even though Lewis has discreetly remained away.

Most Republicans here hope that Lewis will remain discreet for the rest of the campaign and refrain from endorsing their candidate.

However, they are counting on him to do some hard work behind the scenes to persuade the Nation's miners to vote Republican. The pay-off, if he delivers, and the Republicans win, may be a voice in naming the next Secretary of Labor.

Miners Strong in Pivot States

Republican strategists have decided that Lewis is worth bothering about because his miners are in sufficient numbers in such pivotal States as Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Kentucky, and possibly Illinois, to influence the outcome.

The miners are traditionally Democratic voters. They failed to heed Lewis' plea to back Wendell Willkie in 1940. However, they went out on four costly strikes during 1943. Lewis has convinced many of them they were forced to go out because President Roosevelt turned against the mine union.

It is understood that Lewis has made his influence felt through William L. Hutcheson, president of the AFL Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners and chairman of the labor subcommittee of the Republican resolutions committee.

Represented at Convention

Hutcheson's opposition to Lewis' Committee for Industrial Organization in 1935 resulted in a fist fight on the floor of the AFL convention and the CIO's subsequent withdrawal from the AFL. However, after Lewis withdrew from the CIO in 1942, a reconciliation took place, with Hutcheson subsequently fighting for readmission of the UMW to the AFL on Lewis' terms—a battle that was lost.

Lewis is represented at the convention by K. C. Adams, editor of United Mine Workers' Journal; John T. Jones and John Owens, UMW district officials.

They submitted to Hutcheson a proposed draft of the GOP labor plank which Hutcheson revised and condensed somewhat and turned in to the main resolutions committee, where it underwent further revision and condensation.

Bond Sales $463,046

Staunton, Va., June 27.—Staunton and Augusta County's purchases of war bonds during the Fifth War Loan drive amount to $463,046.25. The quota assigned for this drive is $1,525,000 for the city and county, exclusive of Waynesboro. In the city and county, the total of E bonds and others sold to individuals has reached 37.7 per cent of the assigned combined quota.

D.C. Delegation Head Flays GOP Platform

By James E. Chinn

Chicago, June 27.—As the freshly completed GOP platform went before the National Convention today without the long-sought suffrage plank for the District, James A. Councilor, jr., newly-elected chairman of the District delegation, openly denounced the party for its stubborn refusal to recognize the "un-Americanized" status of the voteless citizens of the Nation's Capital.

In a statement bristling with indignation, he declared:

"It is difficult to understand the reasoning or psychology of an organization that is loudly proclaiming in its platform the merits of equal rights for men and women . . . abolition of the poll tax which has as its objective the extension of suffrage to additional citizens, and support of the aspirations of Hawaii and Alaska for eventual statehood. . . which at the same time gives the District with its million citizens a clean brushoff."

Final Plea Called Futile

Councilor, together with Mrs. Joseph C. McGarraghy, appeared before the platform writers to make one final plea for inclusion of a suffrage plank in the platform, but were told their efforts would be futile—that all proposals for even minor changes in the tentative draft were being flatly rejected. Likewise they were advised that a proposal to take the suffrage issue to the floor of the convention would be "ill advised" and "useless."

Naturally, failure of the delegation to win its battle for a franchise plank was discouraging, but Councilor said the fight would be renewed at the convention four years hence.

District Service to Party

"There's no limit to our patience in this situation," Councilor declared. "We've labored diligently in support of the party. We have raised hundreds of thousands of dollars through our absentee voters' bureau. And we've been responsible for actually suggesting many congressional and gubernatorial elections." Then, why in heaven's name, when it seems to be so important to guarantee equal rights everywhere else under the canopy of heaven should not the million citizens of the District have a voice in their own behalf in Congress and the selection of President and Vice President.

New Experience

28 Area Boys Off to Work On Va. Farms

A group of husky Washington boys waited at 5th and K sts. nw. yesterday and pondered methods of milking a cow without getting kicked.

"Maybe you could clamp the cow's legs down," Robert Andrews, 5041 1st st. nw., said hopefully.

He was one of 18 city boys who left shortly afterward for Sussex County, Va., to help out on farms because there are no young men left to do the work there.

Another group will go Thursday, and boys 14 or older who wish to go may register at the district Agriculture Department extension service, 501 K st. nw., or by calling DI. 7000, Ext. 378.

Few Have Farm Experience

Those who left yesterday will be placed on separate farms by the county agent and work at least a month. They will receive from $5 to $12 a week plus room, board and laundry.

Few have had farm experience, although Robert Davis, of 2328 19th st. nw., said he had spent half his 15 years on a farm near Asheville, N. C. He said he could milk a cow, but preferred to drive a tractor.

"Hey," spoke up two city boys in excited falsetto, "Do they let you do that? Hot dog!"

The farmers who employ these two will have as hired hands a Senate Page, Harry Britton, 15, of 5009 N. 25th rd., Arlington, who says he once plowed a "wavy furrow" with a horse-drawn plow, and Alvan Crews, 16, of 4335 Brandywine st. nw., who wants to be a Naval Academy middie and celebrated his departure yesterday by wearing shouting yellow shoe laces and bright red and blue plaid socks at the same time.

Ordered to Write Home

Britton says he has to be back August 1, when Senator H. Styles Bridges (R., Conn.), returns.

Grant Good, 16, of Berwyn, Md., wants to farm in Virginia because his parents came from there. He will pay for his senior year of high school with the money he earns.

The boys will work with peanuts, corn, wheat, tomatoes, beans, apples, peaches, do general farm work, and write home, J. W. Jones, in charge of the program here, told them sternly before they left. "Each of you will be given a postcard, because I don't want to answer 'phone calls from anxious mothers all hours of the day and night like I did last week," he said.

"NOW I UNDERSTAND RUSSIA!"

REVOLUTIONS IN RUSSIA

THEIR LESSONS FOR THE WESTERN WORLD

By G. R. Treviranus

WHAT THIS BOOK TELLS YOU—

1. It gives a vivid account of revolutionary history in Russia in the last 150 years.
2. It supplies an incisive appraisal of the great personages of yesterday and today.
3. It condenses the fascinating story of modern Russia.
4. It presents the key to Russia's problem of the future.
5. It deflates many popular misconceptions about Bolshevism and Communism in Russia.
6. It tells us why democracies have nothing to fear from Russia if their leaders take a firm and honest stand on peace terms.

"WHO writes of Russia must use a long pen, or at least a sharp mind, if he is to avoid the pitfalls into which so many have fallen so often . . . Through a happy combination of virtues, Revolutions in Russia avoids all the pitfalls and achieves something even more remarkable: a new and useful contribution to current knowledge of the past and present of the U.S.S.R. Here is neither a panegyric nor an indictment nor yet a travelogue, but rather a historical resume and interpretation of revolutionary politics (and economics) in the Eurasian heartland . . . solid and stimulating . . . an accurate and level-headed treatise." — Frederick L. Schuman, N. Y. Times Book Review. Illustrated.

Stocks Renew Bullish Drive To 7-Yr. Peaks

New York, June 27 (AP).—Buoyed by further cheering war news and mounting domestic political hopes, the stock market resumed its bullish drive to new seven-year peaks today in another of the fastest sessions for months.

While the fall of Cherbourg had been pretty well discounted marketwise, numerous issues with good peace prospects were front-liners from the start, such sprinters as Willys-Overland appearing in 10,000-share blocks and large-scale deals numerous elsewhere. More wishful-thinking also was touched off by the Republican National Convention at Chicago.

Turnover was relatively heavy in the forenoon, topping the million-share figure by midday. The pace slackened at intervals later, as a little selling cropped up here and there on the idea the swing might be due for a correction, but gains of fractions to more than a point were widespread near the close. The five-hour aggregate was around 2,200,000 shares. Motors, steels, utilities, oils and industrial specialties were conspicuous movers.

Singing Steel Scores Charles Town Upset

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

In an article entitled "Jimmy Foxx Tells Why Rich Red Sox Flopped," the current issue of Yank, the Army weekly, serves up some sensational quotes. Foxx, who in 20 years in the big leagues, had scarcely ever expressed an opinion, now hauls off and lets his former boss, Joe Cronin, have it.

POVICH

Foxx was discussing why Cronin's Red Sox, after buying up all of Connie Mack's stars in the thirties, couldn't win a pennant, and he points a fat and accusing finger at Cronin.

"The difference," he said, "is that one manager knew what he was doing and the other didn't. Cronin didn't. If he had handled our pitchers properly we might have won several pennants. Our hitting was always good but the pitching didn't hold up.

"It wasn't the fault of the pitchers, either. They could have won if Cronin had used more judgment in picking their spots. Didn't every one of them turn out to be winners after they got away from Boston?"

Tsk, tsk, Jimmy. Cronin always spoke well of you. Real nice guys don't talk like that when they leave one manager and start playing for another. Buck Newsom excepted, of course. After all these years as one of the nice guys in the league, Foxx is beginning to sound like Newsom, who was the first to put the blast on Cronin. Coming from Newsom, it wasn't surprising. From Foxx, it is.

The charge has been made before that Cronin didn't handle his pitchers wisely, but his own ball players always defended him. And as for Cronin's failure to win the pennant after buying up Mack's stars, well, they didn't start to flow to the Red Sox until 1934. Then Boston got Grove and Walberg and Bishop and Foxx and Cramer. Cronin didn't win pennants with them, but neither did Mack when he had them all in 1932 and 1933 and most of them in 1934.

When the Red Sox bought Mack's stars and installed Cronin as manager, they got no great bargains. Lefty Grove immediately came up with the first sore arm of his life. Walberg was washed up. Max Bishop played only a couple of years, and Foxx, himself, was suffering from sinus trouble. Mack had them all in good health in 1932-33 and he had Al Simmons and Mickey Cochrane and Jimmy Dykes to go along with them, yet he couldn't win pennants.

The unforgiveable crack by Foxx is the one wherein he says "didn't every one of Cronin's pitchers turn out to be winners after they got away from Boston?" The answer is an emphatic "No." The only guy who ever left the Boston pitching staff in Cronin's regime and turned out to be a winner that we can remember was Buck Newsom, who helped pitch the Tigers to a pennant in 1940.

When Cronin sold Newsom to the Browns, he did so in the knowledge that he was getting rid of a pretty good pitcher, but the fact is that Cronin didn't want Newsom around. There was too much feuding and Cronin had to establish the fact that he was boss. There are other managers who don't want Newsom on their team, notably Joe McCarthy.

As for the other pitchers who left Cronin and turned out to be winners, it would be fascinating if Foxx would name them. We can't think of any. Cronin sold such as Dennis Galehouse to the Browns Ken Chase to the Giants, but they proved to be no balls of fire.

Foxx is definitely more interesting when he discusses the Cubs, for whom he is now working as a third-string catcher. He has nice things to say about Charley Grimm, his present manager, though it could be bread-and-butter talk.

"Jimmy Wilson was a good, sound baseball man, make no mistake about that," says Foxx, "but he was too easygoing for a manager. He would argue with his players instead of telling them off. Now, Charlie Grimm is different. When he took the team over, he called us together for a meeting and told us he was boss and that his word would be law. Everybody understood him. That is, everybody except Lou Novikoff.

"Grimm warned us if anybody was caught out after midnight it would cost him a $50 fine. Then he turned to Novikoff and said: 'Novikoff, I'll bet you another $50 you'll be the first one I catch.' Sure enough, the very next day, Grim caught Lou out of his room at 1:30 a. m. listening to the radio in the hotel lobby and forgetting what time it was."

PARADE OF OLDTIMERS—Baseball's stars of former years—some only your dad will remember—participated in the bond selling activities preceding a unique game in which the Yankees, Giants and Dodgers played a round-robin game Monday night at the Polo Grounds and as a result Uncle Sam is richer by some $56,500,000. The old timers, left to right: Zack Wheat, Dodgers; Moose McCormick, Giants; Herb Pennock, Yankees; National League Umpire Chief Bill Klem; Roger Bresnahan, Giants; Hooks Wiltse, Giants; Wally Schang, Yankees; Nap Rucker, Dodgers, and Otto Miller, Dodgers. The Dodgers, incidentally, won the game, 3-0, over the Giants, and 5-1 over the Yanks before approximately 50,000 fans.

Hockett's Batting Power Soars; Walker, Musial in Hitting Duel

Cleveland Star Jumps Average to .338 to Gain 2d Place in A. L.

Chicago, June 27 (AP).—Cleveland's Oris Hockett made the biggest leap in the American League batting race this week by jumping from sixth to second place after fattening his average by 10 points to .338.

Thurman Tucker of Chicago still topped the list with a .369, dropping only two points off his batting beam of a week ago. Hockett was followed by Bobby Doerr and Irvin Fox, both of Boston, with .325 apiece; Detroit's Chuck Hostetler, who was second last week, with .319; Dick Siebert, Philadelphia, .315; Vern Stephens, St. Louis, .310; Wally Moses, Chicago, .309 and Bob Johnson, Boston, .308.

Averages were computed through Sunday's games and based on 150 or more times at bat.

The New York Yankees, failing to land a player on the "top ten" batting registry, had only one representative among the leaders of the specialized department—Johnny Lindell was tied with the Brown's Don Gutteridge with the most three-base hits, six. Doerr was tops in hits, with 79, and runs, with 47, while Cleveland's Roy Cullenbine still led in two-base blows, 19, and was locked with Frank Hayes of Philadelphia in home runs with eight. Stephens maintained his runs-batted-in lead with 144 and George Case of Washington had the most stolen bases,17.

Gordon Maltzberger, the White Sox fireman, headed the pitching records with a 7-1 record for .875, while Buck Newsom of Philadelphia took over one lead in strikeouts by fanning 65 batsmen.

King Batter in N. L. May Be Decided in Season's Final Days

New York, June 27 (AP).—The St. Louis Cards are pulling away from the field in the National League today but Dixie Walker of the Brooklyn Dodgers and Stan Musial of the Red Birds are hooked up in a tight battle for the batting championship that may go down to the final days of the season for a decision.

Walker's lead faded to three points as his average dropped down nine markers to .377 including games of June 26 while Musial approached the half-way mark with a .374 mark on 86 hits in 230 at bats. Although Dixie's hit production has dropped off, the Brooklyn outfielder still tops the majors with 95 hits in 252 trips including a league-leading total of 21 doubles.

The hitting race is strictly Walker and Musial as a 39-point gap separates them from Phil Weintraub of the Giants whose third place mark of .335 is only one point beter than Brooklyn Augie Galan's .334.

Musial Leads in Triples

Frenchy Bordagaray of the Dodgers was out of action half the week with a bad cold but held the lead in runs scored at 54 while Weintraub held the edge over Howie Schultz of Broklyn with 48 runs batted in. Musial clouted one triple to take over the lead from Johnny Barrett of Pittsburgh with 8 for the year and Mel Ott of the Giants remained way out in front with 18 homers although he failed to hit one during the past week.

Pitching honors went into the service with George Munger of the Cardinals who had won 10 and lost one before he was called to duty Monday. Munger had won his last seven straight. Bucky Walters of Cincinnati with 12 and Bill Voiselle of the Giants with 10 are other leading winners.

Bill McDaniel's 70 Captures Junior Open

Baltimore, June 27 (AP).—Bill McDaniel, 17-year-old Silver Spring golfer, turned in a one-over-par 70 today to win the 1944 Maryland Junior Open in a tournament which resulted in deadlocks for second place in every division.

McDaniel (809 Piney Branch rd.) finished three strokes ahead of the runners-up, Billy Gehring, 18, of Baltimore, and Read Thippeny, 18, of 810 Piney Branch rd., Silver Spring, who tallied 73 strokes each in the 18-hole medal play competition.

Thippeny, a neighbor of the new champion, lost his chance for undisputed place as runnerup when he three-putted the final green.

McDaniel won a $25 war bond while Gehring and Thippeny each was awarded $5 in war stamps.

The defending champion, Joe Barse of Washington, trailed with a 75.

In the 16 and 17 year class, Billy Collins, 16, of Baltimore, took first place and $6 in war stamps with a 75. Tied for second were Bob Roy, 17, and Alan Weisberg, 16, both of Washington, with 77's.

John B. Bruff, jr., 15, of Baltimore, walked off with honors in the division for 15-year-olds and under, chalking up a 75. The second place tie in this section was between Paul De Haviland, 14, of Baltimore, and Walter Gaynor, 15, of Baltimore, who had 78's.

Pen-Mar Pennant Race In Scramble

Cumberland, Md., June 27.—The Centerville (Pa.) Reds climbed back into a tie for first place in the Pen-Mar Baseball League's first half championship race by defeating Cumberland American Legion at Community Park, while the Hiser Steelers of Cumberland were bowing 10 to 2 to the Queen City Brewers.

In the other contest the Midland Indians broke a six-game losing streak and scored their first victory of the campaign at the expense of the Westvaco tossers of the Tri-Towns, 10 to 1, at Midland.

Centerville and Steelers are tied for first with five won and two lost.

Yankees Sign Richmond Star

Richmond, Va., June 27 (AP).—George Bershold Gasser, jr., 23-year-old Richmonder, today signed a contract with the New York Yankees and will play second base for Norfolk Tars against Richmond Colts when the clubs resume their current series at 8:30 p. m. tonight at Mooer Field.

Niggeling Gets Mound Call As Nats Face Tigers Tonight

Detroit, the club that was beating the Nats four straight when last seen at Griffith Stadium, spearheads the invasion of the Western teams that starts tonight under the lights.

The Tigers are the chief reason why the Nats are in the second division, excepting, of course, the Nats themselves. In seven clashes this year, the Tigers have won six from Washington.

Tonight, Manager Ossie Bluege will attempt to remedy, in part, the unhappy situation with respect to the Tigers by wheeling out his once-a-week specialist, Johnny Niggeling. Niggeling has had eight days' rest since pitching against the Yankees and losing a 3-1 game.

Manager Steve O'Neill, who saw his two top pitchers, Dizzy Trout and Hal Newhouser, beaten in a double-header with the Browns on Sunday, is expected to start Southpaw Frank Overmire against the Nats tonight. Overmire was one of the winning pitchers the last visit Detroit made to Washington.

The Nats are currently in a batting slump with George Case and George Myatt the chief slumpees. Bluege is making no changes in his line-up, however, except for the right field job where he has been alternating Jake Powell and Joe Vosmik. Against left-handed pitching, Bluege may also be tempted to use big Roberto Ortiz in right field.

Since returning from their last Western trip, the Nats have had 15 consecutive games with the Yankees and Red Sox exclusively. They didn't do badly, winning eight and losing seven. As Bluege says, "If we had been hitting we could have won 12 of those 15."

Commodores Rally to Trip Cutters, 6-3

Bainbridge, Md., June 27 (AP).—With a four-run uprising in the eighth inning, the Bainbridge Commodores broke up a hotly-contested tilt and stole a 6-3 verdict from the Curtis Bay Coast Guard nine this afternoon for their twenty-seventh win of the season.

Trailing by one run, Jess Pike led off the Commodores' eighth with a triple. Elbie Fletcher walked and Dick Sisler blasted out his third consecutive single to drive in Pike.

Bob Scheffing followed with a double that was good for two more runs and scored when Pitcher Maxie Wilson singled through second.

The Cutters scored first in the third as Korte reached first on a fielder's choice, stole second and came home on Delsavio's double down the first base line.

They picked up another in the fourth when Hank Sauer doubled and tallied on Shilling's single.

Bainbridge tied the count in the second half of the inning as Fletcher was passed, went to third on Sisler's single and scored on an infield out. Robertson, after reaching first on Witek's bobble, executed a double steal that sent Sisler home to tie the game.

Finally Addressed With Marriage Proposal From Man She Loves, Girl Is Delighted at First, Then Filled With Doubt; Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: For three years I have been in love with an Air Corps lieutenant, 22 (2 years my senior). We were together constantly the first two years and found we had an unusual community of interests, due probably to the fact that both of us have approximately the same background.

We terminated our engagement a year ago, realizing that prolonged separations were imminent, due to his constant changes of station and assignments. Also, we were adult enough to realize it would be unwise to restrict our thoughts and contacts just to each other. There have been occasional, infrequent reunions this past year, and we have found each other progressively better company,—certainly more stimulating than any of our other friends of the opposite sex. However, it came as quite a surprise to me, when on his last leave several weeks ago, he suggested that we be married on his return from overseas. I was at once delighted, for certainly that is what I had hoped would be the culmination of our association.

She Stands in Awe Of His Strong Spirit

HOWEVER, several disquieting thoughts have arisen in my mind. Principally they are these: 1. While he is highly educated and intelligent, with his career cut out for him, and knows what he wants to make of his life, the war has somehow clouded his former clarity of vision and purpose. Like so many others these days, he seems uncertain; groping for something to hold fast to in a careening world. Often I have the feeling that he is even groping insofar as his desire to marry is concerned,—for he is a person who lives within himself, and has a wealth of resources which enable him to do so. Unconsciously he thrusts outside influences aside. His love of independence sometimes frightens me, though I respect that attitude and would not want it otherwise.

2. Though normally I am independent and self sufficient, I find that with him I become selfless and spontaneously concur with his slightest desire or whim,—whereas I lean to the opposite extreme with other friends. I often catch myself wondering what on earth is wrong with me, for certainly we have a perfect understanding and there is no suggestion of domination in his attitude toward me. My reaction is almost subservient and humble at times. I resent the "clinging vine" attitude that somehow evolves out of constant association with him.

3. I love him very deeply. I cannot divorce myself from a love that has grown and matured with my growth. But there is that lingering question in the back of my mind as to whether a life together is the right thing for us. Perhaps you can offer some bit of insight that will help me clarify my own mind and meet the situation with a reasonable amount of objectivity and common sense. B. J.

Her Doubts Have Root In Habit of Anxiety

DEAR B. J.: It seems to me you are tilting with windmills, in cudgeling your brain for "ifs" and "buts" to weigh in the balance against (what appears to be) your ardent, fundamental desire to be this man's wife. It occurs to me that your scrupulously nuance-searching reaction to his unexpected proposal of marriage may be an unconsciously camouflaged continuation of a pernicious habit of anxious uncertainty you acquired in relation to him. It may be that up to the time he proposed, you were more or less continuously of two minds as to whether he ever would. And now that he has proposed, — thus terminating your long-standing theoretical justification for anxiety on that score,—it may be that you are unawarely yielding to the momentum of an established habit of worry with regard to the outcome of your association with him, and spontaneously directing that anxiety-impulse toward potential future aspects of your relationship to him; instead of dropping it, as you should.

Or, on the other hand, it may be that in sheer relief at having his proposal, after long uncertainty as to whether it ever would be forthcoming, you are luxuriating in the privilege of weighing the advisability of saying "yes,"—without realizing the compensatory emotional significance of your judicial-type intellectual exercising on the subject.

Her Pliant Attitude Is Favorable Omen

IN ANY EVENT, I find nothing in your story to justify your shadowy dubiety, alleged. Your courtship with the young man appears to follow the routine course which leads to happy marriage between persons of positively compatible temperament and social training. As for your disposition to "become selfless and spontaneously concur with his slightest desire or whim" when in his company,—that disposition to merge your personality completely with his is exactly as it should be: (1) because ideal marriage requires that the contracting parties be instinctively of one accord in principal things; and (2) because it is second nature for the truly feminine personality, who finds herself fortunately affiliated with the genuinely complementary masculine personality, to respond with involuntary, happy compliance to his leadership in matters large and small. # In Real Life Actress Bans Satin If Wed

By Genevieve Reynolds

She has married four different men in less than six months. At present she is saying "I do" to the same man three times each night. On Wednesdays and Saturdays the marriage dose doubles.

Despite the fact that a rabbi, Methodist minister and Catholic priest officiate at each ceremony, the bride in question deserts the young husband. For in private Miss Jean Pearce, star in "Abie's Irish Rose" playing currently at the National Theater, is unmarried.

"If I do walk down the altar in real life, I certainly won't wear a white satin wedding gown," she declares. "I am so sick and tired of putting on all that rigmarole that I'll take a plain no-furbelow wedding."

MISS JEAN PEARCE
. . . Marries Daily

Furthermore, versatile Miss Pearce, who hails from Bowling Green, Ky., doesn't even fall in love with the Abie she marries on the stage so often.

Was Teacher First

"Actors are grand to work with but not to marry in real life," she asserts. "I'll take a solid business man for the permanent role." Quickly she adds, "solid not stolid husband."

"Rarely do you fall in love with your leading man on the stage," explains Miss Pearce as she sips a coca-cola at the Statler Hotel. "To do so would spoil the play. Of course there are a few exceptions but not many."

The youthful Southern miss took a fling at teaching before going to her first love—the stage. "My father, who is a member of the University Faculty at Bowling Green, believes in security first," she remarks smilingly.

Her first semiprofessional experience was gained with the Guignos Players at the University of Kentucky. Later she played barn stock at Clinton Hollow. Then she went on the road with "something that amounts to the old Chautauqua," Miss Pearce says. "They were all one-night stands . . . and what an experience! But I did see the beautiful New England States that way."

Remembers Lean Years

Like many other successful stars, slender, blonde Miss Pearce recalls lean years while knocking around Broadway waiting for a chance. She remembers picking up cigarette butts from wastepaper baskets skimping on food, pressing and pressing the one good outfit. To tide her over she did radio and modeling work.

Jean (on the stage Rosemary) got her start in the theater by telling Frank McCoy (co-producer with Ann Nichols of "Abie's Irish Rose") that she didn't want to be a star but just a good two-fisted yourneyman actor. McCoy kept her working so steadily and hard that when picture offers came she was too tired to consider them. She played "Claudia" in John Golden's play of that name. Other roles included parts in "You Can't Take It With You," "Let Us Be Gay" and "Stage Door."

Her blue eyes twinkling, Miss Pearce laughed over this parting shot. "Always a bride, never a bridesmaid."

Garden Club's Next Meeting To Be in Fall

At its June meeting the Town and Country Garden Club voted to discontinue its meetings until September.

Club's projects, making children's bibs for the hospital and providing flowers for the sick, will be carried on individually by each member. Committees were appointed to gather flowers and information on the art of spatter print work and to obtain information on seed inoculation chemicals and results.

Reports were given on use of iron sulphate and powdered sulphur in feeding trees and shrubs. The need for such treatment is evident when the leaves turn yellow in spring and summer.

A talk on "Science Discovers Poison Ivy's Usefulness to Man" aroused everyone's interest, but the speaker ended with the warning that for man's present comfort all should rid their home grounds of poison ivy and poison oak by using a commercial weed killer.

Club's president urged members to cooperate with the Government and organizations in control of insect pests and objectionable plants, and to make practical use of the best agriculture methods for an abundant production on arms and victory gardens.

Dutch Officer, Nephew Recall Fiery Surabaya

By Peggy Preston

They criss-crossed the world's sea lanes for two years and were re-united . . . yes, you guessed it, in Washington.

The two sturdy seafaring Dutch naval officers, uncle and nephew, beamed upon each other yesterday as they sat down with their pipes and pondered the happy circumstance that brought them together in the Nation's Capital. They last met 'mid the fearful, fiery destruction of the Dutch naval base at Surabaya, Java, in March, 1942.

Capt. Willem Heringa, elder of the pair, is here for conferences with Dutch and American naval officers. His nephew, Lieut. Hein Heringa, arrived in the United States from Australia a short time ago, en route to England. Yesterday he obtained leave from his ship in an East Coast seaport to come down for the reunion.

"When I left him at Surabaya, I certainly doubted that I'd ever see him again," said the captain of his nephew, who, with a force of men remained to observe the destruction which the Dutch themselves instituted when it was known that the Japanese were about to occupy the base.

Ship Is Tropical Paradise

Captain Heringa, a professional naval officer, left the island at the orders of his government shortly before the arrival of the invaders. Sailing for Ceylon with 400 picked men, he journeyed from there to South Africa, where they joined forces with the British and have since been engaged in fighting the enemy.

His nephew had an amazing tale of escape and adventure to tell his uncle. After all the Allied planes had been shot down, young Lieutenant Heringa and his companions received order to leave Java if they could.

"Our commanding officer had a brilliant idea," he explained. "He made a floating tropical island out of our mine-sweeper, the Crynssen. It was a real Hollywood affair; the only thing missing in that jungle atmosphere was your movie star, Dorothy Lamour.

Return Their One Aim

"Our men worked very hard. Palm trees and tropical plants were carried on board and fastened to the ship with the help of camouflage netting. Gradually the ship disappeared and a tropical island took its place. The monkeys we had on board as pets had a wonderful time climbing around in the greenery."

For the past two years the lieutenant has been with the submarine service in Australia. Now he is going to England where he hopes to help in the liberation of the Netherlands.

The Heringas, uncle and nephew, have a single aim: to get back to Surabaya. To the captain it will mean reunion with his family and an opportunity to set to work once more on the naval base that was the pride of the Dutch East Indies. Manned by 16,000 men, it was the base at which the Houston and Marblehead sought shelter in the early days of the war.

Soldier's Gift

Legion Post To Be Given Oil Painting

An oil painting by an Army artist, Corpl. C. M. Erban, which is valued at $500, will be presented by the soldier to the newly formed American Legion Post, No. 109, at the Washington National Airport, tonight.

Corporad Erban who lives in Alexandria and is on duty at the War Department has painted a picture of three servicemen representing the Army, Navy and Marine Corps against a background of flags including the Stars and Stripes and the American Legion banner.

The presentation will be made at 8:30 in the President's Room of the terminal building preceding a ceremonial dinner at 9 o'clock on the airport terrace. Present to receive the gift will be Winfield C. Aub, post commander, and Norman Hiscox, vice commander.

Eddy Mangold, post finance officer, said a $25 war bond will be awarded.

Other officers of the post which was formed on March 29 with installation ceremonies conducted by John M. Galt, department commander of Virginia, are: adjutant, Karl Snyder, and sergeant at arms, James Childs.

The members are employed by the various companies and operating units at the airport.

Montgomery Adopts 8-Hour Police Shifts

All Montgomery County policemen will work on eight-hour daily shifts beginning Saturday instead of 10 and 14 hours, the Board of County Commissioners voted yesterday at its meeting in Rockville.

Police Chief Leslie Carlin was authorized to rearrange the working schedule of policemen at all four stations in the county to three daily shifts.

With the shorter working hour program the board appointed six more desk clerks to serve at headquarters and substations, four of whom will be desk clerks and two relief clerks. Appointed at salaries of $145 a month they are: Roland Banks, Rockville; George H. Wilmeth, Takoma Park; Frank Daniels, Silver Spring; French Hobbs, Colesville, relief clerk; Charles E. Benson, Cabin John; and Alfred Steel, Bethesda, relief clerk.

Two Are Retired

For the first time in the history of the Police Department two men were retired with 50 per cent of their salary beginning Saturday. Upon recommendation of the Police Trial Board Capt. William LeRoy Rodgers in charge of the Bethesda station and Detective Corl. John A. Berry, assigned to the identification bureau in Rockville, were voted to be retired due to poor health. Both officers requested the action because of incapacity. Rodgers will receive $125 a month and Berry will be paid $100 a month.

Several police promotions were also approved by the commissioners. Sergt. James S. McAuliffe who was assigned to the Detective Bureau was named to succeed Rodgers in command of the Bethesda station while Corpls. Leo C. Day and William M. Whalen were assigned to the Detective Bureau to be stationed at Bethesda.

Corpl. Jerry Hobbs was appointed sergeant of police to succeed Sergeant McAuliffe. Succeeding Berry will be Policeman Stanley A. Harding who was made a detective corporal. Those promoted to corporal are Policemen Ira K. Hover, Takoma Park substation; Ernest L. Thompson, Bethesda substation, and Ralph Howard at police headquarters, Rockville.

9 Are Appointed

Nine emergency policemen who have served a year or more and whose services were found "satisfactory" receiving permanent appointments are Eugene B. Brown, David G. Bissett, Robert L. Cosgrove, George E. Wilt, Coy Moorefield, Clarence S. Gray, Joseph W. Ward, Thomas J. Harding, and Clarence B. Crown.

Fred B. Johnson and Maurice A. Leahy, both of Bethesda, were appointed policemen at salaries of $175 a month.

Ringside Table

With Mary Harris

IDA CLARK, feather-fingered organist at Burt's Trans-Lux

MILTON DAVIS BACK IN PICTURE. That popular and indestructible chap, Milton Davis, will bring his novachord to the Neptune Room on Saturday, July 8, replacing concert pianist Cervantes who is booked into New York. Milt, a native son of Washington, played solo organ in Warner Brother theaters for years, went to the Hamilton's Rainbow Room around 1935, remained there until last spring when he left to operate his own club, was stymied by the 30 per cent tax. It'll be nice seeing you back, Milt.

Von Da Llee, former singing star of the Madrillon, has moved uptown to the Metronome Room with Charles Victor's band . . . Jane Dexter, winner of a "Stardust" prize at Restaurant 400, also publicized in a picture mag, is the new Madrillon canary with Johnny Robb's orchestra . . . Singing comedienne Nora Williams, big, blonde and luscious, is back in the Windsor Room.

STATLER GOES OPERATIC. Annamary Dickey, "opera's glamor girl," is now spilling high notes at the Statler. The young Illinois soprano has had a rocketing career. She won a $1000 prize in the Metropolitan Opera radio auditions in 1939, later made her Metropolitan debut in "Orfeo." Since then she's appeared in both grand and light opera, with Bing Crosby on the air and in many a camp show. Also at the Statler are those baffling gentlemen, Magicians Frakson and Rico.

COMES THE RAVEN. Martinette and his trained raven will give an uncanny air to the new Trade Winds show, opening tonight. The raven does everything but say "Nevermore!"—he's no pessimist. New also are La Marr and Martin, dancers from Manhattan's Latin Quarter, and Alan Reno, a junior edition of Frisco.

SOLDIER'S AND SAILORS' GAZETTE. V-mail from Sailor Eddie Chase, now in Alaska, who used to be found in the Pall Mall Room and Burt's Trans-Lux, says the boys up there have put on a show called "This Is the Navy." There was a cast of 140, a 35-piece orchestra and our Eddie wrote 18 of the tunes. . . . A map of Trinidad, quaintly marked, came from Jack Coleman of the Merchant Marine, former promotion manager of Mayfair. That same afternoon we ran into Sailor Jimmy Byrd, also a Mayfair ex-promotion manager, now a three-striper and expecting sailing orders any minute. . . . Ex-Sailor Russ Cullen will leave the Mayflower Lounge in two weeks to become a dirt farmer.

Completely candid is Pianist Bob Brewer of the King Cole Room, who says his new song creation, "If I Didn't Love Just You," is "a steal on everything ever written." It sounds nice and Inkspotty.

APOLOGY! APOLOGY! Greeter George of the Balalaika was recently referred to in this column as Djugashvily. His right name is Gogi Ugaloblishvily. It's amazing how we get mixed up in simple spelling.

SENSATIONAL—REALLY! The "Black Market" ballad being poured out every night at the Brown Derby by George Berg . . . The new sky-blue sports jacket with accompanying claret cravat and hankie being sported by Maestro Sasha Lucas of the Old New Orleans . . . The Turkish number in Treasure Island's "Ice Parade." Imagine a harem beauty on skates! . . . The prophecies of Merry-Land's Mr. Wiz. If your're going to have an accident or attend a funeral, he goes right ahead and tells you . . . The Puerto Rican dancing of Celia Soto at La Conga. She's the unchained spirit of the rhumba.

The Sheehan clan are really Spanish, says Manager William Sheehan of the Hamilton Hotel, who ought to know. Some Sheehans (spelled a bit differently, doubtless) were in the Spanish armada wrecked off the Irish coast. Manager Sheehan avers that one branch of the family went back to Spain, may be living there yet, for all he knows.

CUSTOMER DRIFTS. The Anchor Room's name intrigues the boys in the bell-bottom trousers. They slide in by the dozen every afternoon, are mucho pleased with the battle-wagon interior . . . Convalescent officers from Walter Reed Hospital were quick to discover Lounge Riviera, their nearest smart port of call. Bandleader Pete Macias, veteran of World War I, gives them a warm welcome . . . We never saw such a place as the Casino Royal for big dinner parties of Government girls and lassies in uniform . . . Restaurant "823" is the businessman's delight. He goes there for lunch, comes back in the early or late p. m. to dine, or sip beer . . . Glen Echo's ballroom attracts the younger crowd, with loads of soldiers and sailors. Lots of them go out and take a whirl at the park's various rides at intermissions. The Starlight Roof, Del Rio and the Dubonnet Room have much the same allure for what the trade calls "upper-bracket customers"—meaning officers, visiting businessmen, elegantly caparisoned femmes . . . Crossroads, out Bladensburg way, is where all the world meets, especially on Saturday nights.

Fire Destroys Truck, 6 Oil Storage Tanks

Frederick, Md., June 27 (AP).—A 5-ton tank truck and six 10,000-gallon crude oil storage tanks belonging to the E. C. Valentine asphalt plant at nearby Groves, were destroyed in a three-alarm fire today.

Firemen said a tank truck exploded while loading, igniting the flames. An 80-pound lid of one tank was blown 200 yards by an internal blast from the burning vat.

Commuters Oppose W. & O. D. Trackage Sale

A group of commuters dependent on the Purcellville-Rosslyn line of the Southern Railroad, now leased by the Washington and Old Dominion, filed a double-barreled volley of exceptions with the Interstate Commerce Commission yesterday in connection with the application of the W. & O. D. to purchase the trackage.

The passengers were represented by Nellie O. Fletcher of this city and Leesburg, Va., who has been active in W. & O. D. matters since 1940. Their contention is that if the purchase goes through the service on the line, which they describe as unsatisfactory, will further deteriorate—if it isn't entirely discontinued.

Yesterday's brief, a document of 20 pages, takes exception not only to the railroad's own brief of exceptions filed after the ICC hearing February 26, but also to the findings of Robert Romero, examiner for the ICC—and this despite the fact that Romero's recommendation that the permission to purchase the line be denied, is just what the interveners want.

The reason for this is that Romero's conclusion was based on his examination of the Washington and Old Dominion's financial status, and the interveners want to keep alive their case for adequate service.

The railroad has 10 days within which to file an answer to Mrs. Fletcher's brief.

Judge Woolls said that his latest letter, dated June 9, arrived Monday and assures his family that he is safe and well.
